To ENCO'URAGE. v. a. [encourager, Fr.]

1. To animate; to incite to any thing.

They encourage themselves in an evil matter. Ps. lxiv. 5.

2. To give courage to; to support the spirits; to inspirit; to embolden.

Kinds of musick encourage men, and make them warlike, or make them soft and effeminate. Bacon.

I would neither encourage the rebels, nor discourage the protestants loyalty. King Charles.

3. To raise confidence; to make confident.

I doubt not but there are ways to be found, to assist our reason in this most useful part; and this the judicious Hooker encourages me to say. Locke.

ENCO'URAGEMENT. n. s. [from encourage.]

1. Incitement to any action or practice; incentive.

2. Encrease of confidence.

Such strength of heart
Thy conduct and example gives; nor small
Encouragement Godolphin, wise and just. Philips.

3. Favour; countenance; support.

For when he dies, farewel all honour, bounty,
All generous encouragement of arts. Otway's Orphan.

The reproach of immorality will lie heaviest against an established religion, because those who have no religion will profess themselves of that which has the encouragement of the law. Rogers.

ENCO'URAGER. n. s. [from encourage.] One that supplies incitements to any thing; a favourer.

Live then, thou great encourager of arts,
Live ever in our thankful hearts. Dryden.

As the pope is a master of polite learning, and a great encourager of arts; so at Rome these arts immediately thrive, under the encouragement of the prince. Addison.

To ENCRO'ACH. v. a. [accrocher, from croc a hook, Fr.]

1. To make invasions upon the right of another; to put a hook into another man's possessions to draw them away.

Those Irish captains of counties have encroached upon the queen's freeholders and tenants. Spenser.

2. To advance gradually and by stealth upon that to which one has no right: with on before the subject.

This hour is mine; if for the next I care, I grow too wide,
And do encroach upon death's side. Herbert.

Tisiphone, let loose from under ground,
Before her drives diseases and affright;
And every moment rises to the sight,
Aspiring to the skies, encroaching on the light. Dryden.

To ENCRO'ACH. v. n.

1. To creep on gradually without right.

The superstition that riseth voluntarily, and by degrees mingleth itself with the rites, even of every divine service, done to the only true God, must be considered of as a creeping and encroaching evil. Hooker.

Th' encroaching ill you early should oppose;
Flatter'd, 'tis worse, and by indulgence grows. Dryden.

2. To pass bounds.

They fabled how the serpent, whom they call'd
Ophion, with Eurynome, the wide
Encroaching Eve perhaps, had first the rule
Of high Olympus. Milton's Par. Lost.

Next, fenc'd with hedges and deep ditches round,
Exclude th' encroaching cattle from thy ground. Dryden.

ENCRO'ACHER. n. s. [from encroach.]

1. One who seizes the possession of another by gradual and silent means.

The bold encroachers on the deep,
Gain by degrees huge tracts of land,
Till Neptune, with one gen'ral sweep,
Turns all again to barren strand. Swift.

2. One who makes slow and gradual advances beyond his rights.

Full dress creates dignity, augments consciousness, and keeps at distance an encroacher. Clarissa.

ENCRO'ACHMENT. n. s. [from encroach.]

1. An unlawful gathering in upon another man. For example: if two men's grounds lie together, the one presseth too far upon the other; or if a tenant owe two shillings rent-service to the lord, and the lord takes three: so the Spencers encroached to themselves royal power and authority. Cowel.

But this usurper his encroachment proud
Stays not on man: to God his tow'r intends Siege, and defiance. Milton's Par. Lost.

If it be a man's known principle to depart from his right, ill men will make unjust encroachments upon him. Atterbury.

2. To advance into the territories or rights of another.

As a man had a right to all he could employ his labour upon, so he had no temptation to labour for more than he could make use of: this left no room for controversy about the title, nor for encroachment on the right of others. Locke.

The ancient Romans made many encroachments on the sea, and laid the foundations of their palaces within the very borders of it. Addison on Italy.

The people, since the death of Solon, had already made great encroachments. Swift.

To ENCU'MBER. v. a. [encombrer, Fr.]

1. To clog; to load; to impede.

We have, by this many years experience, found that exceeding great good, not encumbered with any notable inconvenience. Hooker.

Encumber'd with his vest, without defence. Dryden.

2. To entangle; to embarrass; to obstruct.

The verbal copier is encumbered with so many difficulties at once, that he can never disentangle himself. Dryden.

The god awak'd,
And thrice in vain he shook his wing,
Encumber'd in the silken string. Prior.

3. To load with debts; as, his estate is encumbered with mortgages.

ENCU'MBRANCE. n. s. [from encumber.]

1. Clog; load; impediment.

Philosophers agreed in despising riches, at best, considering them as unnecessary encumbrances o: life. Temple.

Dead limbs are an encumbrance to the body, instead of being of use to it. Addison's Freeholder.

2. Excrescence; useless addition.

Strip from the branching Alps their piny load,
The huge encumbrance of horrifick woods. Thomson.

3. Burthen upon an estate.

In respect of the encumbrances of a living, consider whether it be sufficient for his family, and to maintain hospitality. Ayl.

ENCY'CLICAL. adj. [ἐγκυκλικος.] Circular; sent round through a large region.

This council was not received in patriarchal sees, which is evident from Photius's encyclical epistle to the patriarch of Alexandria. Stillingfleet.

ENCYCLOPE'DIA. } n. s. [ἐγκυκλοπαιδια.]
ENCYCLOPE'DY. } The circle of sciences; the round of learning.

In this encyclopædia and round of knowledge, like the great wheels of heaven, we must observe two circles, that while we are daily carried about, and whirled on by the swing and rapt of the one, we may maintain a natural and proper course in the sober wheel of the other. Brown's Vulg. Err.

Every science borrows from all the rest, and we cannot attain any single one without the encyclopædy. Glanville.

This art may justly claim a place in the encyclopædia, especially such as serves for a model of education for an able politician. Arbuthnot.

ENCY'STED. adj. [κύστις.] Enclosed in a vesicle or bag.

Encysted tumours borrow their names from a cyst or bag in which they are contained. Sharp's Surgery.

END. n. s. [ende, Sax.]

1. The extremity of the length of any thing materially extended. Of bodies that have equal dimensions we do not use end: the extremity of breadth is side.

Jonathan put forth the end of the rod that was in his hand, and dipt it in a honeycomb. 1 Sam.

2. Extremity or last part in general.

The extremity and bounds of all bodies we have no difficulty to arrive at; but, when the mind is there, it finds nothing to hinder its progress into this endless expansion: of that it can neither find, nor conceive any end. Locke.

3. The last particle of any assignable duration.

Behold the day groweth to an end. Judges.
At the end of two months she returned. Judges.
If the world's age and death be argu'd well
By the sun's fall, which now tow'rds earth doth bend,
Then we might fear, that virtue, since she fell
So low as woman, should be near her end. Donne.

4. The conclusion or cessation of any action.

Jacob had made an end of commanding his sons. Gen.
Yet vainly most their age in study spend;
No end of writing books, and to no end. Denham.
The causes and designs of an action are the beginning: the effects of these causes, and the difficulties met with in the execution of these designs, are the middle; and the unravelling and resolution of these difficulties, are the end. Broome of Epic Poetry.

5. When end is not used materially, it is opposed to beginning.

Better is the end than the beginning thereof. Eccles.

6. The conclusion or last part of any thing; as, the end of a chapter; the end of a discourse.

7. Ultimate state; final doom.

Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright, for the end of that man is peace. Psalms.

8. The point beyond which no profession can be made.

They reel to and fro, and stagger like a drunken man, and are at their wits end. Ps. cvii. 27.

9. Final determination; conclusion of debate or deliberation.

My guilt be on my head, and there's an end! Shakesp.

10. Death; fate; decease.

I determine to write the life and the end, the nature and the fortunes of George Villiers. Wotton.
The soul receives intelligence,
By her near genius, of the body's end,
And so imparts a sadness to the sense. Daniel's Civ.
'Tis the great business of life to fit ourselves for our end, and no man can live well that hath not death in his eye. L'Estrange.
Remember Milo's end,
Wedg'd in that timber which he strove to rend. Roscommon.
My God, my father, and my friend,
Do not forsake me in my end. Roscommon.
Unblam'd through life, lamented in thy end. Pope.

11. Cessation; period.

What is the sign of the end of the world? Matth.
Great houses shall have an end. Amos.

12. Limit; termination.

There is no end of the store. Nahum.

13. Abolition; total loss.

There would be an end of all civil government, if the assignment of civil power were by such institution. Locke.

14. Cause of death; destroyer.

Take heed you dally not before your king,
Lest he that is the supreme King of kings
Confound your hidden falsehood, and award
Either of you to be the other's end. Shak. Rich. III.

15. Consequence; conclusive event; conclusion.

O, that a man might know
The end of this day's business ere it come!
But it sufficeth that the day will end. Shakesp.
The end of these things is death. Rom. vi. 21.

16. Fragment; broken piece.

Thus I clothe my naked villainy
With old odd ends, stol'n forth of Holy writ,
And seem a saint. Shakesp. Richard III.

17. Purpose; intention.

There was a purpose to reduce the monarchy to a republick, which was far from the end and purpose of that nation. Clarendon.
I have lov'd!
What can thy ends, malicious beauty, be?
Can he who kill'd thy brother, live for thee. Dryd.
Heav'n, as its instrument, my courage sends;
Heav'n ne'er sent those who fight for private ends. Dryden.
Others are apt to attribute them to some false end or intention. Addison's Spectator.

18. Thing intended; final design; the termination of intellectual prospect.

Wisdom may have framed one and the same thing to serve commodiously for divers ends, and of those ends any one may be sufficient cause for continuance, though the rest have ceased. Hooker.
All those things which are done by him, have some end for which they are done; and the end for which they are done, is a reason of his will to do them. Hooker.
Her only end is never-ending bliss;
Which is, the eternal face of God to see,
Who last of ends, and first of causes is;
And to do this, she must eternal be. Davies.
The end of the commandment is charity. 1 Tim.
Two things I shall propound to you, as ends; since the wise men of this world have made them theirs. Suckling.
Such conditions did fully comply with all those ends, for which the parliament had first taken up arms. Clarendon.
Hear and mark
To what end I have brought thee hither. Milton.
Life, with my Indamora, I would chuse;
But, losing her, the end of living lose. Dryden.
For when success a lover's toil attends,
Few ask if fraud or force attain'd his ends. Pope.
The end of our fast is to please God, and make him propitious. Smalridge.

19. An end. [Probably corrupted from on end.] Upright; erect: as, his hair stands an end.

20. An end has a signification in low language not easily explained; as, most an end, commonly: perhaps it is properly on end, at the conclusion; or corrupted from some old word not easily recoverable.

Stay'st thou to vex me here?
Slave, that, still an end, turns me to shame! Shak.

To* END. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To terminate; to conclude; to finish.

They have ended all my harvest. Ruth.

2. To destroy; to put to death.

The lord of Stafford dear to-day hath bought
Thy likeness; for instead of thee, King Harry,
This sword hath ended him. Shakesp. Henry IV.

To* END. v. n.

1. To come to an end; to be finished.

Then ease your weary Trojans will attend,
And the long labours of your voyage end. Dryden.

2. To die. [τελευτάω.]

Yet happy were my death, mine ending blest,
If this I could obtain, that breast to breast,
Thy bosom might receive my yielded spright. Fairfax.

3. To terminate; to conclude.

Our laughing, if it be loud and high, commonly ends in a deep sigh, and all the instances of pleasure have a sting in the tail. Taylor.

4. To cease; to fail.

His sovereignty, built upon either of these titles, could not have descended to his heir, but must have ended with him. Locke.

5. To conclude action or discourse.

The angel ended, and in Adam's ear

To* ENDA'MAGE. v. a. [from damage.] To mischief; to prejudice; to harm.

Nor ought he car'd whom he endamaged
By tortous wrong, or whom bereav'd of right. Spenser.
It cometh sometime to pass, that a thing unnecessary in itself doth notwithstanding appear convenient to be still held, even without use, lest, by reason of that coherence which it hath with somewhat most necessary, the removal of the one should endamage the other. Hooker.
Where your good word cannot advantage him,
Your slander never can endamage him. Shakesp.
Gather our soldiers, scatter'd and disperst,
And lay new platforms to endamage them. Shakesp.
The trial hath endamag'd thee no way;
Rather more honour left, and more esteem. Milt.
When an erroneous opinion is published, the publick is endamaged, and therefore it becomes punishable by the magistrate. South.
A great alteration doth seldom any wise endamage or disorder the globe. Woodw. Nat. Hist.

ENDA'MAGEMENT. n. s. [from endamage.] Damage; loss.

These flags of France that are advanced here,
Have hither march'd to the endamagement. Shakesp.

To* ENDA'NGER. v. a. [from danger.]

1. To put into hazard; to bring into peril.

Every one desires his own preservation and happiness, and therefore hath a natural dread of every thing that can destroy his being, or endanger his happiness. Tillotson.
He rais'd the rest,
To force the foes from the Lavinian shore,
And Italy's endanger'd peace restore. Dryden's Æn.
My kingdom claims your birth; my late defence,
Of our endanger'd fleet, may claim your confidence. Dryden.

Great things of small
One can create; and in what place soe'er
Thrive under evil, and work ease out of pain,
Through labour and endurance. Milton.

Their fortitude was most admirable in their presence and endurance of all evils, of pain, and of death. Temple.

3. State of suffering.

I would fain know whether that man takes a rational course to preserve himself, who refuses the endurance of these higher troubles, to secure himself from a condition infinitely more miserable? South.

4. Delay; procrastination. Obsolete.

I should have ta'en some pains to bring together
Yourself and your accusers, and have heard you,
Without endurance further. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

To* ENDURE. v. a. [endurer, Fr. durare, Lat.]

1. To bear; to sustain; to support unbroken.

The hardness of bodies is caused chiefly by the jejuneness of the spirits, and their imparity with the tangible parts, which make them not only hard, but fragile, and less enduring of pressure. Bacon.

Both were of shining steel, and wrought so pure,
As might the strokes of two such arms endure. Dryd.

2. To bear with patience.

So dear I love him, that with him all deaths
I could endure; without him, live no life. Milton.

The gout haunts usually the easy and the rich, the nice and the lazy, who grow to endure much, because they can endure little. Temple.

By thine own tongue thou art condemn'd, and must Endure our law. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

Taking into the city all such things as they thought needful for the enduring of the siege, they destroyed all the rest. Knolles's Hist.

3. To undergo; to sustain.

2. Operative; active; working; not at rest.

If then we will conceive of God truly, and, as far as we can, adequately, we must look upon him not only as an eternal Being, but also as a Being eternally energetick. Grew.

E'NERGY. n. s. [ἐνεργεια.]

1. Power not exerted in action.

They are not effective of any thing, nor leave no work behind them, but are energies merely; for their working upon mirrours, and places of echo, doth not alter any thing in those bodies. Bacon.

2. Force; vigour; efficacy; influence.

Whether with particles of heavenly fire
The God of nature did his soul inspire;
Or earth, but new divided from the sky,
And pliant still, retain'd th' ethereal energy. Dryden.

God thinketh with operation infinitely perfect, with an omnipotent as well as an eternal energy. Grew.

Beg the blessed Jesus to give an energy to your imperfect prayers, by his most powerful intercession. Smalridge.

What but God!
Inspiring God! who, boundless spirit all,
And unremitting energy, pervades,
Adjusts, sustains, and agitates the whole. Thomson.

3. Faculty; operation.

Matter, though divided into the subtilest parts, moved swiftly, is senseless and stupid, and makes no approach to vital energy. Ray.

How can concussion of atoms beget self-consciousness, and powers and energies that we feel in our minds? Bentley.

4. Strength of expression; force of signification; spirit; life.

Who did ever, in French authors, see
The comprehensive English energy? Roscommon.

Swift and ready, and familiar communication is made by speech; and, when animated by elocution, it acquires a greater life and energy, ravishing and captivating the hearers. Holder.

Many words deserve to be thrown out of our language, and not a few antiquated to be restored, on account of their energy and sound. Swift.

To* ENE'RVATE. v. a. [enervo, Lat.] To weaken; to deprive of force; to emasculate.

Great empires, while they stand, do enervate and destroy the forces of the natives which they have subdued, resting upon their own protecting forces. Bacon.

Sker away as swift as stones
Enforced from the old Assyrian slings. Shakesp.

4. To instigate; to provoke; to urge on; to animate.

Fear gave her wings, and rage enforc'd my flight
Through woods and plains. Fairy Queen.

If you knew to whom you shew this honour,
I know you would be prouder of the work,
Than customary bounty can enforce you. Shakesp.

5. To urge with energy.

All revoke
Your ignorant election; enforce his pride,
And his old hate to you. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

He prevailed with him, by enforcing the ill consequence of his refusal to take the office, which would be interpreted to his dislike of the court. Clarendon.

To avoid all appearance of disaffection, I have taken care to enforce loyalty by an invincible argument. Swift.

6. To compel; to constrain.

For competence of life I will allow you,
That lack of means enforce you not to evil. Shakesp.

A just disdain conceived by that queen, that so wicked a rebel should prevail against her, did move and almost enforce her to send over that mighty army. Davies on Ireland.

7. To press with a charge. Little used.

In this point charge him home, that he effects
Tyrannick pow'r: If he evade us there,
Enforce him with his envy to the people,
And that the spoils got on the Antiates
Was ne'er distributed. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

To ENFO'RCE. v. n. To prove; to evince; to shew beyond contradiction.

Which laws in such case we must obey, unless there be reason shewed, which may necessarily enforce that the law of reason, or of God, doth enjoin the contrary. Hooker.

ENFO'RCE. n. s. [from force.] Power; strength. Not used.

He now defies thee thrice to single fight,
As a petty enterprise of small enforce. Milton.

ENFO'RCEDLY. adv. [from enforce.] By violence; not voluntarily; not spontaneously; not by choice.

If thou did'st put this sow'r cold habit on,
To castigate thy pride, 'twere well, but thou
Dost it enforcedly: thou'd'st courtier be,
Wert thou not beggar. Shakesp. Timon.

ENFO'RCEMENT. n. s. [from enforce.]

1. An act of violence; compulsion; force offered.

Confess 'twas hers, and by what rough enforcement
You got it from her. Shakesp.

He that contendeth against these enforcements, may easily master or resist them. Raleigh's History.

2. Sanction; that which gives force to a law.

The rewards and punishments of another life, which the Almighty has established as the enforcements of his law, are of weight enough to determine the choice. Locke.

3. Motive of conviction; urgent evidence.

The personal descent of God himself, and his assumption of our flesh to his divinity, was an enforcement beyond all the methods of wisdom that were ever made use of in the world. Hammond.

4. Pressing exigence.

More than I have said,
The leisure and enforcement of the time
Forbids to dwell on. Shakesp. Rich. III.

ENFO'RCER. n. s. [from enforce.] Compeller; one who effects by violence.

When a man tumbles a cylinder or roller down an hill, 'tis certain that the man is the violent enforcer of the first motion of it. Hammond.

ENFO'ULDRED. adj. [from foudre, Fr.] Mixed with lightning. Obsolete.

Heart cannot think what courage and what cries,
With foul enfouldred smoak and flashing fire,
The hell-bred beast threw forth unto the skies.
Fairy Queen.

To ENFRA'NCHISE. v. a. [from franchise.]

1. To admit to the privileges of a freeman.

The English colonies, and some septs of the Irishry, enfranchised by special charters, were admitted to the benefit of the laws. Davies.

Romulus was the naturl parent of all those people that were the first inhabitants of Rome, or of those that were after incorporated and enfranchised into that name, city, or government. Hale.

2. To set free from slavery.

Men, forbearing wine, come from drinking healths to a draught at a meal; and, lastly, to discontinue altogether; but if a man have the fortitude and resolution to enfranchise himself at once, that is the best. Bacon's Essays.

If they won a battle, prisoners became slaves, and continued so in their generations, unless enfranchised by their masters. Temple.

3. To free or release from custody.

His mistress
Did hold his eyes lockt in her crystal looks.
—Belike, that now she hath enfranchis'd them,
Upon some other pawn for fealty. Shakesp.

4. To denizen; to endenizen.

These words have been enfranchised amongst us. Watts.

ENFRA'NCHISEMENT. n. s. [from enfranchise.]

1. Investiture of the privileges of a denizen.

The incorporating a man into any society, or body politick. For example, he that is by charter made denizen of England, is said to be enfranchised; and so is he that is made a citizen of London, or other city, or burgess of any town corporate, because he is made partaker of those liberties that appertain to the corporation. Cowel.

His coming hither hath no farther scope,
Than for his lineal royalties, and to beg
Enfranchisement immediate on his knees. Shakesp.

2. Release from prison or from slavery.

Never did captive with a freer heart
Cast off his chains of bondage, and embrace
His golden uncontroul'd enfranchisement. Shakesp.

ENFRO'ZEN. particip. [from frozen.] Congealed with cold. Not used.

Yet to augment the anguish of my smart,
Thou hast enfrozen her disdainful breast,
That no one drop of pity there doth rest. Spenser.

To ENGA'GE. v. a. [engager, Fr.]

Engrapple with thy son, as fierce as he. Daniel.

To ENGRASP. v. a. [from grasp.] To seize; to hold fast in the hand; to gripe.

Now 'gan Pyrocles wax as wood as he,
And him affronted with impatient might;
And both together fierce engrasped he,

To ENGRA'VE. v. a. preter. engraved; part. pass. engraved or engraven. [engraver, Fr.]

1. To picture by incisions in any matter.

Her ivory forehead, full of bounty brave,
Like a broad table, did itself dispread,
For love his lofty triumphs to engrave,
And write the battle of his great godhead. Fairy Queen.
O'er all, the heav'n's refulgent image shines;
On either gate were six engraven signs. Addison.
Names fresh engrav'd appear'd of wits renown'd,
I look'd again, nor could their trace be found. Pope.

2. To mark wood or stone.

Engrave the two stones with the names. Ex. xxviii. 11.

3. To impress deeply; to imprint.

It will scarce seem possible, that God should engrave principles, in men's minds, in words of uncertain signification. Locke.
Our Saviour makes this return, fit to be engraven in the hearts of all promoters of charity. Atterbury.
Sounds which address the ear, are lost and die
In one short hour; but that which strikes the eye,
Lives long upon the mind: the faithful sight
Engraves the knowledge with a beam of light. Watts.

4. [from grave.] To bury; to inhume; to inter.

The son had charge of them, now being dead,
In seemly sort their corses to engrave,
And deck with dainty flowers their bridal bed. Spenser.

ENGRA'VER. n. s. [from engrave.] A cutter in stone or other matter.

Images are not made in the brain itself, as the pencil of a painter or engraver makes the images in the table, but are imprinted in a wonderful method in the soul. Hale

To ENGRIE'VE. v. a. [from grieve.] To pain; to vex; to afflict; to disconsolate.

The gnawing anguish, and sharp jealousy,
Which his sad speech infixed in my breast,
Rankled so sore, and fester'd inwardly,
That my engrieved mind could find no rest. Fairy Queen.
Aches, and hurts, and colds, do engrieve either towards rain, or towards frost. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

To ENGRO'SS. v. a. [grossir, Fr.]

1. To thicken; to make thick.

But more happy he than wise,
Of that sea's nature did him not avise;
The waves thereof so slow and sluggish were,
Ingro s'd with mud, which did them foul agrise,
That every weighty thing they did upbear. Fairy Queen.

2. To increase in bulk.

Though pillars, by channeling, be seemingly engrossed to our sight, yet they are truly weakened in themselves. Wotton.

3. To fatten: to plump up.

Not sleeping, to engross his idle body;
But praying, to enrich his watchful soul. Shakesp.

4. To seize in the gross; to seize the whole of any thing.

If thou engrossest all the griefs as thine,
Thou robb'st me of a moiety. Shakesp.
Those two great things that so engross the desires and designs of both the nobler and ignobler sort of mankind, are to be found in religion; namely, wisdom and pleasure. South.
A dog, a parrot, or an ape,
Or some worse brute in human shape,
Engross the fancies of the fair. Swift.

5. To purchase the whole of any commodity for the sake of selling at a high price.

6. To copy in a large hand.

Here is th' indictment of the good lord Hastings,
Which in a set hand fairly is engross'd. Shakesp.
A clerk, foredoom'd his father's soul to cross,
Who pens a stanza when he should engross. Pope.

ENGRO'SSER. n. s. [from engross.] He that purchases large quantities of any commodity, in order to sell it at a high price.

A new sort of engrossers, or forestallers, having the feeding and supplying this numerous body of workmen in the woollen manufactures, out of their warehouses, set the price upon the poor landholder Locke.

ENGRO'SSMENT. n. s. [from engross.] Appropriation of things in the gross; exorbitant acquisition.

Our thighs are pack't with wax, our mouths with honey:
We bring it to the hive; and, like the bees,
Are murder'd for our pains! This bitter taste
Yield his engrossments to the dying father. Shakesp.

Those held their immoderate engrossments of power and favour by no other tenure than presumption. Swift.

To ENGUA'RD. v. a. [from guard.] To protect; to defend; to surround as guards. Not used.

A hundred knights! yes, that on ev'ry dream
He may enguard his dotage with their pow'rs,
And hold our lives at mercy. Shakesp. King Lear.

To ENHA'NCE. v. a. [hausser, enhausser, Fr.]

1. To lift up; to raise on high. A sense now obsolete.

Both of them high at once their hands enhanc'd,
And both at once their huge blows down did sway. Spenser.

2. To raise; to advance: to heighten in price.

The desire of money is every where the same: its vent varies very little, but as its greater scarcity enhances its price, and increases the scramble. Locke.

3. To raise in esteem.

What is it but the experience of want that enhances the value of plenty? L'Estrange.

The remembrance of the difficulties we now undergo, will contribute to enhance our pleasure. Atterbury.

4. To aggravate; to increase from bad to worse.

To believe or pretend that whatever our hearts incite is the will of God within us, is the principle of villany that hath acted in the children of disobedience, enhanced and improved with circumstances of greater impudence than the most abominable heathens were guilty of. Hammond

The relation which those children bore to the priesthood, contributed to enhance their guilt, and increase their punishment. Atterbury.

ENHA'NCEMENT. n. s. [from enhance.]

1. Increase; augmentation of value.

Their yearly rents are not improved, the landlords making no less gain by fines than by enhancement of rents. Bacon

2. Aggravation; increase of ill.

Jocular slanders have, from the slightness of the temptation, an enhancement of guilt. Government of the Tongue.

ENI'GMA. n. s. [ænigma, Lat. αἴνιγμα.] A riddle; an obscure question; a position expressed in remote and ambiguous terms.

The dark enigma will allow
A meaning; which, if well I understand,
From sacrilege will free the god's command. Dryden.

A custom was amongst the ancients of proposing an enigma at festivals, and adjudging a reward to him that solved it. Pope.

ENIGMA'TICAL. adj. [from enigma.]

1. Obscure; ambiguously or darkly expressed.

Your answer, sir, is enigmatical. Shakesp.

Enigmatical deliveries comprehend useful verities; but being mistaken by liberal expositors at first, they have been misunderstood by most since. Brown's Vulg. Err.

Whilst they affect enigmatical obscurity, they puzzle the readers of their divulged processes. Boyle.

Athenæus gives instances of the enigmatical propositions in use at Athens, and of the forfeitures and rewards upon the solution or nonsolution. Broome's Notes on the Odyssey.

2. Cloudy; obscurely conceived or apprehended.

Faith here is the assent to those things which come to us by hearing, and are so believed by adherence, or dark enigmatical knowledge, but hereafter are seen or known demonstratively. Hammond.

ENIGMA'TICALLY. adv. [from enigma.] In a sense different from that which the words in their familiar acceptation imply.

Homer speaks enigmatically, and intends that these monsters are merely the creation of poetry. Broome.

ENI'GMATIST. n. s. [from enigma.] One who deals in obscure and ambiguous matters; maker of riddles.

That I may deal more ingenuously with my reader than the abovementioned enigmatist has done, I shall present him with a key to my riddle. Addison.

To ENJO'IN. v. a. [enjoindre, Fr.] To direct; to order; to prescribe. It is more authoritative than direct, and less imperious than command.

To satisfy the good old man,
I would bend under any heavy weight
That he'll enjoin me to. Shakesp. Much Ado.

Monks and philosophers, and such as do continually enjoin themselves. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

It endeavours to secure every man's interest, by enjoining that truth and fidelity be inviolably preserved. Tillotson.

ENJO'INER. n. s. [from enjoin.] One who gives injunctions. Dict.

ENJO'INMENT. n. s. [from enjoin.] Direction; command.

To ENJO'Y. v. a. [jouir, enjouir, Fr.]

1. To feel or perceive with pleasure; to have a pleasing sense of; to be delighted with.

I could enjoy the pangs of death,
And smile in agony. Addison's Cato.

2. To obtain possession or fruition of.

Edward the saint, in whom it pleased God, righteous and just, to let England see what a blessing sin and iniquity would not suffer it to enjoy. Hooker.

He, who, to enjoy
Plato's elysium, leap'd into the sea,
Cleombrotus. Milton's Par. Lost.

3. To please; to gladden; to exhilarate; to glad; to delight. This sense is usual with the reciprocal pronoun, and is derived from enjouir.

Creatures are made to enjoy themselves, as well as to serve us. More.

When a man shall, with a sober, sedate, diabolical rancour, look upon and enjoy himself in the sight of his neighbour's sin and shame, can he plead the instigation of any appetite in nature? South.

To ENJO'Y. v. n. To live in happiness.

Then I shall be no more!
And Adam, wedded to another Eve,
Shall live with her enjoying, I extinct. Milton.

ENJO'YER. n. s. [from enjoy.] One that has fruition or possession. Dict.

ENJO'YMENT. n. s. [from enjoy.] Pleasure; happiness; fruition.

Edmund, enkindle all the sparks of nature
To quit this horrid act. Shakesp. King Lear.

2. To rouse passions; to set the soul into a flame.

Your hand
Gave sign for me to leave you: so I did,
Fearing to strengthen that impatience,
Which seem'd too much enkindled. Shakesp.

3. To incite to any act or hope.

Do you not hope your children shall be kings,
When those who gave the thane of Cawder to me,
Promis'd no less to them?
——That, trusted home,
Might yet enkindle you unto the crown. Shakesp.

To ENLARGE. v. a. [enlargir, Fr.]

1. To make greater in quantity or appearance.

The wall, in lustre and effect like glass,
Which o'er each object casting various dyes,
Enlarges some, and others multiplies. Pope.

2. To increase any thing in magnitude; to extend.

Where there is something both lasting and scarce, and so valuable to be hoarded up, there men will not be apt to enlarge their possessions of land. Locke.

3. To encrease by representation; to magnify; to exaggerate.

4. To dilate; to expand.

O ye Corinthians, our mouth is open unto you, our heart is enlarged. 2 Cor. vi. 11.

5. To set free from limitation.

Though she appear honest to me, yet at other places she enlargeth her mirth so far, that there is shrewd construction made of her. Shakesp.

6. To extend to more purposes or uses.

It hath grown from no other root than only a desire to enlarge the necessary use of the word of God, which desire hath begotten an errour, enlarging it farther than soundness of truth will bear. Hooker.

7. To amplify; to aggrandise.

This is that science which would truly enlarge men's minds, were it studied. Locke.

Could the mind, as in number, come to so small a part of extension or duration as excluded divisibility, that would be the indivisible unit, or idea; by repetition of which it would make its more enlarged ideas of extension and duration. Locke.

8. To release from confinement.

Enlarge the man committed yesterday,
That rail'd against our person. Shakesp. Henry V.

9. To diffuse in eloquence.

They enlarged themselves upon this subject with all the invidious insinuations they could devise. Clarendon.

To ENLA'RGE. v. n.

1. To expatiate; to speak in many words.

They appointed the chancellor of the Exchequer to enlarge upon any of those particulars. Clarendon.

This is a theme so unpleasant, I delight not to enlarge on it; rather wish the memory of it were extinct. Decay of Piety.

2. To be further extended.

The caliphs obtained a mighty empire, which was in a fair way to have enlarged, until they fell out among themselves. Raleigh.

ENLA'RGEMENT. n. s. [from enlarge.]

1. Encrease; augmentation; farther extension.

The king afterwards enlarged the constant obedience of the city with enlargement both of liberties and of revenues. Hayward.

The ocean, which so long our hopes confin'd,
Could give no limits to his vaster mind:
Our bounds enlargement was his latest toil,
Nor hath he left us pris'ners to our isle.
Waller.

There never were any islands, or other considerable parcels of land, amassed or heaped up; nor any enlargement, or addition of earth, made to the continent by the mud that is carried down into the sea by rivers. Woodward.

The commons in Rome generally pursued the enlargement of their power by more set quarrels of one entire assembly against another. Swift.

The Greek tongue received many enlargements between the time of Homer and that of Plutarch. Swift.

2. Release from confinement or servitude.

Lieutenant,

These great orbs thus radically bright,
Primitive founts and origins of light,
Enliven worlds denied to human sight. Prior.

In a glass-house the workmen often fling in a small quantity of fresh coals, which seems to disturb the fire, but very much enlivens it. Swift.

3. To make sprightly or vivacious.

4. To make gay or cheerful in appearance.

ENLI'VENER. n. s. [from enliven.] That which animates; that which puts in motion; that which invigorates.

But fire, th' enlivener of the general frame,
Is one, its operation still the same:
Its principle is in itself, while ours
Works, as confederates war, with mingled pow'rs.
Dryden.

To ENLU'MINE. v. n. [enluminer, Fr.] To illumine; to illuminate; to enlighten. Not in use.

For having yet, in his deducted spright,
Some sparks remaining of that heav'nly fire,
He is enlumin'd with that goodly light,
Unto like goodly semblance to aspire. Spenser.

E'NMITY. n. s. [from enemy; as if enemity, inamity.]

We have been entitled, and have had our names prefixed at length to whole volumes of mean productions. Swift.

4. To give a claim to any thing.

But we, descended from your sacred line,
Entitled to your heav'n, and rites divine,
Are banish'd earth. Dryden's Virgil.

God discovers the martyr and confessor without the trial of flames and tortures, and will hereafter entitle many to the rewards of actions which they had never the opportunity of performing. Addison.

He entitled himself to the continuance of the divine protection and goodness, by humiliation and prayer. Atterbury.

Hardly even is the penitent sinner saved; thus difficult is that duty, by which alone he can be reconciled to his Creator, and entitled to the mercies of the gospel. Rogers.

5. To grant any thing as claimed by a title.

This is to entitle God's care how and to what we please. Locke.

E'NTITY. n. s. [entitas, low Lat.]

1. Something which really is; a real being.

Dear hope, earth's dowry and heaven's debt,
The entity of things that are not yet:
Subt'lest, but surest being. Crashaw.

Fortune is no real entity, nor physical essence, but a mere relative signification. Bentley.

Here entity and quiddity,
The souls of defunct bodies fly. Hudibras.

2. A particular species of being.

All eruptions of air, though small and slight, give an entity of sound, which we call crackling, puffing, and spitting; as in bay salt and bay leaves, cast into the fire. Bacon

God's decrees of salvation and damnation, both Romish and Reformed, affix to men's particular entity, absolutely considered, without any respect to demeanours. Hammond's Fundamentals.

To ENTOI'L. v. a. [from toil.] To ensnare; to entangle; to bring into toils or nets.

He cut off their land forces from their ships, and entoiled both their navy and their camp with a greater power than theirs, both by sea and land. Bacon.

To ENTO'MB. v. a. [from tomb.] To put into a tomb; to bury.

Processions were first begun for the interring of holy martyrs, and the visiting of those places where they were entombed. Hooker.

The cry went once for thee, and yet it may again,
If thou wouldst not entomb thyself alive,
And case thy reputation in a tent. Shakesp.

They within the beast's vast womb,
The choice and flow'r of all their troops entomb. Denham.

E'NTRAILS. n. s. without a singular. [entrailles, Fr. ἔντερα.]

1. The intestines; the inward parts; the guts.

What, hath thy fiery heart so parch'd thine entrails,
That not a tear can fall? Shakesp. Henry VI.

The entrails are all without bones; save that a bone is sometimes found in the heart of a stag. Bacon's Natural History.

I tear that harden'd heart from out her breast,
Which with her entrails makes my hungry hounds a feast. Dryden.

2. The internal parts.

A precious ring that lightens all the hole,
And shews the ragged entrails of this pit. Shakesp.

He had brought to light but little of that treasure, that lay so long hid in the dark entrails of America. Locke.

The earth hath lost
Most of her ribs, as entrails; being now
Wounded no less for marble than for gold. Ben Jonson.

To ENTRA'IL. v. a. [intralciare, Ital.] To mingle; to interweave; to diversify.

Over him, art striving to compare
With nature, did an arbor green dispred,
Framed of wanton ivy, flow'ring fair,
Through which the fragrant eglantine did spread,
His pricking arms entrail'd with roses red. Fairy Q.

A little wicker basket,
Made of fine twigs, entrailed curiously,
In which they gather'd flowers. Spenser's Prothal.

E'NTRANCE. n. s. [entrant, Fr.]

1. The power of entering into a place.

Whence are you, sir? Has the porter his eyes in his head, that he gives entrance to such companions? Pray, get you out. Shakesp.

Where diligence opens the door of the understanding, and impartially keeps it, truth is sure to find both an entrance and a welcome too. South.

2. The act of entering.

The reason, that I gather, he is mad,
Is a mad tale he told to-day at dinner,
Of his own door being shut against his entrance. Shakesp.

Better far, I guess,
That we do make our entrance several ways. Shak.

All the world's a stage,
And all the men and women merely players;
They have their exits and their entrances. Shakesp.

3. The passage by which a place is entered; avenue.

He charged them to keep the passages of the hilly country; for by them there was an entrance into Judea. Judith.

Palladio did conclude, that the principal entrance was never to be regulated by any certain dimensions, but by the dignity of the master. Wotton.

Many are the ways that lead
To his grim cave, all dismal! yet to sense
More terrible at th' entrance than within. Milton.

Let this, and every other anxious thought,
At th' entrance of my threshold be forgot. Dryden.

4. Initiation; commencement.

This is that which, at first entrance, baulks and cools them: they want their liberty. Locke.

5. Intellectual ingress; knowledge.

He that travelleth a country before he hath some entrance into the language, goeth to school, and not to travel. Bacon's Essays.

6. The act of taking possession of an office or dignity.

From the first entrance of this king to his reign, never was king either more loving, or better beloved. Hayw. Edw. VI.

7. The beginning of any thing.

St. Augustine in the entrance of one of his sermons makes a kind of apology. Hakewill on Providence.

The earl of Holland we have had occasion to mention before in the first entrance upon this discourse. Clarendon.

To ENTRA'NCE. v. n. [from trance; transe, Fr. from transeo, Lat. to pass over; to pass for a time from one region to another.]

1. To put into a trance; to withdraw the soul wholly to other regions, while the body appears to lie in dead sleep.

2. To put into an extasy; to make insensible of present objects.

With delight I was entranced, and carried so far from myself, as that I am sorry that you ended so soon. Spenser.

Adam, now enforc'd to close his eyes,
Sunk down, and all his spirits became entranc'd. Milton.

And I so ravish'd with her heav'nly note,
I stood entranc'd, and had no room for thought;
But all o'erpow'r'd with ecstasy of bliss,
Was in a pleasing dream of paradise. Dryden.

To ENTRA'P. v. a. [from trap.]

1. To ensnare; to catch in a trap or snare.

Take heed, mine eyes, how ye do stare
Henceforth too rashly on that guileful net;
In which, if ever eyes entrapped are,
Out of her bands ye by no means shall get. Spenser.

The fraud of England, not the force of France,
Hath now entrapt the noble-minded Talbot. Shakesp.

2. To involve unexpectedly in difficulties or distresses; to entangle.

Misfortune waits advantage to entrap.
The man most wary, in her whelming lap. Fairy Queen.

1. To petition; to solicit; to importune.

Isaac entreated the Lord for his wife. Gen. xxxv. 21.

2. To prevail upon by solicitation.

I have a wife, whom, I protest, I love;
I would she were in heaven, so she could
Entreat some pow'r to change this currish Jew. Shakesp.

The Lord was entreated of him, and Rebecca his wife conceived. Gen xxv. 21.

It were a fruitless attempt to appease a power, whom no prayers could entreat, no repentance reconcile. Rogers

3. To treat or use well or ill.

Whereas thy servant worketh truly, entreat him not evil. Eccles. vii. 20.

Must you, sir John, protect my lady here?
Entreat her not the worse in that I pray
You use her well Shakesp. Henry VI.

Well I entreated her, who well deserv'd;
I call'd her often: for she always serv'd:
Use made her person easy to my sight,
And ease insensibly produc'd delight Prior.

4. To entertain; to amuse. Not used.

My lord, I must entreat the time alone.
—God shield I should disturb devotion Shakesp.

5. To entertain; to receive. Not in use.

The garden of Proserpino this hight,
And in the midst thereof a silver seat,
With a thick arbour goodly overdight,
In which she often us'd, from open heat,
Herself to shroud, and pleasures to entreat.
Fairy Queen.

To ENTRE'AT v. n.

1. To offer a treaty or compact. Not used.

Alexander was the first that entreated peace with them. Mac.

2. To treat; to discourse. Not used.

The most admirable mystery of nature is the turning of iron, touched with the loadstone, toward the North pole, of which I shall have farther occasion to entreat. Hakewill.

3. To make a petition.

They charged me, on pain of perpetual displeasure, neither to speak of him, entreat for him, or any way sustain him. Shakesp.

The Janisaries entreated for them, as valiant men. Knolles.

ENTRE'ATANCE. n. s. [from entreat.] Petition; entreaty; solicitation. Not used.

These two entreatance made they might be heard,
Nor was their just petition long deny'd. Fairfax.

ENTREATY. n. s. [from entreat.] Petition; prayer; solicitation; supplication; request.

If my weak orator
Can from his mother win the duke of York
Anon expect him here; but if she be
Obdurate to entreaties, God forbid
We should infringe the holy privilege
Of sanctuary. Shakesp. Rich. III.

ENTREMETS. n. s. [Fr.] Small plates set between the main dishes.

Chards of beet are plants of white beet transplanted, producing great tops, which, in the midst, have a large white main shoot, which is the true chard used in pottages and entremets. Mortimer.

E'NTRY. n. s. [from enter; entrée, Fr.]

1. The passage by which any one enters a house.

Some there are that know the resorts and falls of business, that cannot sink into the main of it; like a house that hath convenient stairs and entries, but never a fair room. Bacon.

A straight long entry to the temple led,
Blind with high walls, and horror over head. Dry.

Is all this hurry made
On this account, because thou art afraid
A dirty hall or entry should offend
The curious eyes of thy invited friend? Dryden

We proceeded through the entry, and were necessarily kept in order by the situation. Tatler.

2. The act of entrance; ingress.

Bathing and anointing give a relaxation or emollition; and the mixture of oil and water is better than either of them alone, because water entereth better into the pores, and oil after entry softeneth better. Bacon's Nat. Hist

The lake of Constance is formed by the entry of the Rhine. Addison

By the entry of the chyle and air into the blood, by the lacteals, the animal may again revive. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

3. The act of taking possession of any estate.

4. The act of registering or setting down in writing.

A notary made an entry of this act. Bacon.

5. The act of entering publickly into any city.

2. To cover; to hide; to surround.

The best and wholesom'st spirits of the night envelop you, good provost. Shak. Meas. for Meas.

A cloud of smoke envelops either host,
And all at once the combatants are lost:
Darkling they join adverse, and shock unseen,
Coursers with coursers justling, men with men.
Dryden.

It is but to approach nearer, and that mist that enveloped them will remove. Locke.

Nocturnal shades
This world envelop, and th' inclement air
Persuades men to repel benumming frosts. Philips.

3. To line; to cover on the inside.

His iron coat, all overgrown with rust,
Was underneath, enveloped with gold,
Darkened with filthy dust. Fairy Queen.

ENVELOPE. n. s. [Fr.] A wrapper; an outward case; an integument; a cover.

Send these to paper-sparing Pope,
And, when he sits to write,
No letter with an envelope
Could give him more delight. Swift.

To* ENVENOM. v. a. [from venom.]

1. To taint with poison; to poison; to impregnate with venom. It is never used of the person to whom poison is given, but of the draught, meat, or instrument by which it is conveyed.

The treacherous instrument is in thy hand,
Unbated and envenom'd. Shakesp.

Alcides, from Oechalia crown'd
With conquest, felt th' envenom'd robe, and tore,
Thro' pain, up by the roots Thessalian pines. Milt.

Nor with envenom'd tongue to blast the fame
Of harmless men. Philips.

2. To make odious.

Oh, what a world is this, when what is comely
Envenoms him that bears it! Shak. As you like it.

3. To enrage; to exasperate.

With her full force she threw the pois'nous dart,
And fix'd it deep within Amata's heart;
That thus envenom'd she might kindle rage,
And sacrifice to strife her house and husband's age. Dryden.

E'NVIABLE. adj. [from envy.] Deserving envy; such as may excite envy.

They, in an enviable mediocrity of fortune, do happily possess themselves Carew's Surv. of Corn

E'NVIER. n. s. [from envy.] One that envies another; a maligner; one that desires the downfal of another.

Men had need beware how they be too perfect in compliments, for that enviers will give them that attribute, to the disadvantage of their virtues Bacon.

They ween'd
To win the mount of God, and on his throne
To set the envier of his state, the proud
Aspirer; but their thoughts proved fond and vain. Milton

All preferments in church and state were given by him, all his kindred and friends promoted, and all his enemies and enviers discountenanced Clarendon.

E'NVIOUS. adj. [from envy.]

1. Infected with envy; pained by the excellence or happiness of another.

A man of the most envious disposition that ever infected the air with his breath, whose eyes could not look right upon any happy man, nor ears bear the burden of any man's praise. Sidney.

Still in thy right hand carry gentle peace,
To silence envious tongues. Shakesp. Hen. VI.

2. Sometimes with against.

Be not thou envious against evil men. Prov. xxiv. 19.

3. Sometimes with at.

Neither be thou envious at the wicked. Prov. xxiv. 19.

4. Commonly with of.

Sure you mistake the precept, or the tree:
Heav'n cannot envious of his blessings be. Dryden.

E'NVIOUSLY. adv. [from envious.] With envy; with malignity; with ill-will, excited by another's good.

Damned spirits, being fallen from heaven, endeavour enviously to obstruct the ways that may lead us thither. Duppa.

How enviously the ladies look,
When they surprise me at my book!
And sure as they be alive at night,
As soon as gone, will shew their spight. Swift.

To* ENVI'RON. v. a. [environner, Fr.]

1. To surround; to encompass; to encircle.

I stand as one upon a rock,
Environ'd with a wilderness of sea. Shakesp.

The country near unto the city of Sultania is on every side environed with huge mountains. Knolles.

The manifold streams of goodly navigable rivers, as so many chains, environed the same site and temple Bacon

Within the environing rocks stood the city. Sandys.

Thought following thought, and step by step led on,
He enter'd now the bordering desart wild,
And with dark shades and rocks environ'd round,
His holy meditation thus pursu'd. Milton.

God hath scattered several degrees of pleasure and pain in all the things that environ and affect us, and blended them together in almost all our thoughts. Locke.

2. To involve; to envelop.

May never glorious sun reflect his beams
Upon the country where you make abode!
But darkness and the gloomy shade of death
Environ you, 'till mischief and despair
Drive you to break your necks. Shak. Hen. VI.

Since she must go, and I must mourn, come night,
Environ me with darkness whilst I write. Donne.

3. To surround in a hostile manner; to besiege; to hem in.

Methought a legion of foul fiends
Environed me and howled in mine ears. Shakesp.

In thy danger,
If ever danger do environ thee,
Commend thy grievance to my holy prayer. Shak.

I did but prompt the age to quit their clogs,
By the known rules of ancient liberty,
When straight a barbarous noise environs me. Milt.

4. To inclose; to invest.

The soldier, that man of iron,
Whom ribs of horrour all environ. Cleaveland.

ENVI'RONS. n. s. [environs, Fr.] The neighbourhood, or neighbouring places round about the country.

To* ENU'MERATE. v. a. [enumero, Lat.] To reckon up singly; to count over distinctly; to number.

You must not only acknowledge to God that you are a sinner, but must particularly enumerate the kinds of sin where of you know yourself guilty. Wake's Preparation for Death.

Besides enumerating the gross defect of duty to the queen, I shew how all things were managed wrong. Swift.

ENUMERA'TION. n. s. [enumeratio, Lat.] The act of numbering or counting over; number told out.

Whosoever reads St. Paul's enumeration of duties must conclude, that well nigh the business of Christianity is laid on charity. Sprat.

The chemists make spirit, salt, sulphur, water, and earth their five elements, though they are not all agreed in this enumeration of elements. Watts.

To* ENU'NCIATE v. a. [enuncio, Lat.] To declare; to proclaim; to relate; to express.

ENUNCIA'TION. n. s. [enunciatio, Lat.]

1. Declaration; publick attestation; open proclamation.

Preaching is to strangers and infants in Christ, to produce faith; but this sacramental enunciation is the declaration and confession of it by men in Christ, declaring it to be done, and owned, and accepted, and prevailing. Taylor.

2. Intelligence; information.

It remembers and retains such things as were never at all in the sense; as the conceptions, enunciations, and actions of the intellect and will. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

3. Expression.

ENU'NCIATIVE. adv. [from enunciate.] Declarative; expressive.

This presumption only proceeds in respect of the dispositive words, and not in regard of the enunciative terms thereof. Ayliffe.

ENU'NCIATIVELY. adv. [from enunciative.] Declaratively.

E'NVOY. n. s. [envoye, Fr.]

1. A publick minister sent from one power to another.

Now the Lycian lots conspire
With Phœbus; now Jove's envoy through the air
Brings dismal tidings. Denham.

Perseus sent envoys to Carthage, to kindle their hatred against the Romans. Arbuthnot on Coins.

2. A publick messenger, in dignity below an ambassador.

3. A messenger.

The watchful sentinels at ev'ry gate,
At ev'ry passage to the senses wait;
Still travel to and fro the nervous way,
And their impressions to the brain convey
Where their report the vital envoys make,
And with new orders are commanded back.
Blackmore.

To E'NVY. v. a. [envier, Fr. invidere Lat.]

1. To hate another for excellence; happiness, or success.

Envy thou not the oppressor, and chuse none of his ways. Prov iii. 31.

A woman does not envy a man for fighting courage, nor a man a woman for her beauty. Collier of Envy.

2. To grieve at any qualities of excellence in another.

I have seen the fight,
When I have envied thy behaviour. Shakesp.

You cannot envy your neighbour's wisdom, if he gives you good counsel; nor his riches, if he supplies you in your wants; nor his greatness, if he employs it to your protection. Swift

3. To grudge; to impart unwillingly; to withhold maliciously.

Johnson, who, by studying Horace, had been acquainted with the rules, seemed to envy others that knowledge. Dryden.

To E'NVY. v. n. To feel envy; to feel pain at the sight of excellence or felicity: with at.

In seeking tales and informations
Against this man, whose honesty the devil
And his disciples only envy at,
Ye blew the fire that burns ye. Shak. Hen. VIII.

He that loves God is not displeased at accidents which God chuses, nor envies at those gifts he bestows. Taylor

Who would envy at the prosperity of the wicked, and the success of persecutors? Taylor.

E'NVY. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Pain felt and malignity conceived at the sight of excellence or happiness.

Envy is a repining at the prosperity or good of another, or anger and displeasure at any good of another, which we want, or any advantage another hath above us. Ray on the Creation.

Envy, to which th' ignoble mind's a slave,
Is emulation in the learn'd or brave. Pope.

2. It is used sometimes with of.

All the conspirators, save only he,
Did that they did in envy of great Cæsar. Shak.

3. Sometimes with to.

Many suffered death merely in envy to their virtuous and superior genius. Swift.

4. Rivalry; competition.

You may see the parliament of women, the little envies of them to one another. Dryden.

5. Malice; malignity.

Madam, this is a meer distraction;
You turn the good we offer into envy. Shakesp.

6. Publick odium; ill repute; invidiousness.

Edward Plantagenet should be shewed unto the people; to discharge the king of the envy of that opinion and bruit, how he had been put to death privily. Bacon.

To ENWHE'EL. v. a. [from wheel.] To encompass; to encircle. A word probably peculiar to Shakespeare.

Hail to thee, lady! and the grace of heav'n,
Before, behind thee, and on ev'ry hand
Enwheel thee round. Shakesp. Othello.

To ENWO'MB. v. a. [from womb.]

1. To make pregnant.

Me then he left enwombed of this child,
This luckless child, whom thus ye see with blood.
Spenser.

I'm your mother;
And put you in the catalogue of those
That were enwombed mine. Shakesp.

2. To bury; to hide as in a womb.

Or as the Africk niger stream enwombs
Itself into the earth, and after comes,
Having first made a natural bridge to pass,
For many leagues, far greater than it was;
May't not be said, that her grave shall restore
Her greater, purer, finer, than before? Donne.

EO'LIPILE. n. s. [from Æolus and pila.] A hollow ball of metal with a long pipe; which ball, filled with water, and exposed to the fire, sends out, as the water heats, at intervals, blasts of cold wind through the pipe.

Considering the structure of that globe, the exterior crust, and the waters lying round under it, both exposed to the sun, we may fitly compare it to an eolipile, or an hollow sphere with water in it, which the heat of the fire rarifies, and turns into vapours and wind. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

EPA'CT. n. s. [ἐπακτη.] A number, whereby we note the excess of the common solar year above the lunar, and thereby may find out the age of the moon every year. For the solar year consisting of 365 days, the lunar but of 354, the lunations every year get eleven days before the solar year; and thereby, in 19 years, the moon completes 20 times 12 lunations, or gets up one whole solar year; and having finished that circuit, begins again with the sun, and so from 19 to 19 years. For the first year afterwards, the moon will go before the sun but 11 days; the second year 22 days; the third 33 days: but 30 being an entire lunation, cast that away, and the remainder 3 shall be that year's epact; and so on, adding yearly 11 days. To find the epact, having the prime or golden number given, you have this rule:

Divide by three; for each one left add ten;
Thirty reject: the prime makes epact then. Harris.

As the cycle of the moon serves to shew the epacts, and that of the sun the dominical letter, throughout all their variations; so this Dionysian period serves to shew these two cycles both together, and how they proceed or vary all along, 'till at last they accomplish their period, and both together take their beginning again, after every 532 year. Holder.

EPA'ULMENT. n. s. [Fr. from epaule a shoulder.] In fortification, a sidework made either of earth thrown up, of bags of earth, gabions, or of fascines and earth. It sometimes denotes a semibastion and a square orillion, or mass of earth faced and lined with a wall, designed to cover the cannon of a casemate. Harris.

EPE'NTHESIS. n. s. [ἐπενθεσις.] [In grammar.] The addition of a vowel or consonant in the middle of a word. Harris.

E'PHA. n. s. [Hebrew.] A measure among the Jews, containing fifteen solid inches.

The epha and the bath shall be of one measure; that the bath may contain the tenth part of an homer, and the epha the tenth part of an homer. Ezekiel.

EPHE'MERA n. s. [ἐφήμερη.]

1. A fever that terminates in one day.

2. An insect that lives only one day.

EPHE'MERAL. } adj. [ἐφημέριος.] Diur-
EPHE'MERICK. } nal; beginning and ending in a day.

This was no more than a mere bubble or blast, and like an ephemeral fit of applause. Wotton.

EPHE'MERIS. n. s. [ἐφημερις.]

1. A journal; an account of daily transactions.

2. An account of the daily motions and situations of the planets.

When casting up his eyes against the light,
Both month, and day, and hour he measur'd right;
And told more truly than the ephemeris;
For art may err, but nature cannot miss. Dryden.

EPHE'MERIST. n. s. [from ephemeris.] One who consults the planets; one who studies or practises astrology.

The night before he was discoursing of and slighting the art of foolish astrologers, and genethliacal ephemerists, that pry into the horoscope of nativities. Howel.

EPHEMERON-WORM. n. s. [from ἐφήμερον and worm.] A sort of worm that lives but a day.

Swammerdam observes of the ephemeron-worms, that their food is clay, and that they make their cells of the same. Derham.

E'PHOD. n. s. [אפד] A sort of ornament worn by the Hebrew priests. That worn by the high priest was richly composed of gold, blue, purple, crimson, and twisted cotton; and upon the part which came over his two shoulders were two large precious stones, upon which were engraven the names of the twelve tribes of Israel, upon each stone six names. Where the ephod crossed the high priest's breast, was a square ornament, called the breast plate; in which twelve precious stones were set, with the names of the twelve tribes of Israel engraved on them, one on each stone. The ephods worn by the other priests were of plain linen. Calmet.

He made the ephod of gold blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen. Exod. xxxix. 2.

Array'd in ephods; nor so few
As are those pearls of morning dew,
Which hang on herbs and flowers. Sandys.

E'PIC. adj. [epicus, Lat. ἐπος.] Narrative; comprising narrations, not acted, but rehearsed. It is usually supposed to be heroick, or to contain one great action achieved by a hero.

Holmes, whose name shall live in epic song,
While music numbers, or while verse has feet.
Dryden.

The epic poem is more for the manners, and the tragedy for the passions. Dryden.

From morality they formed that kind of poem and fable which we call epic. Broome.

EPICE'DIUM. n. s. [ἐπικήδιος.] An elegy; a poem upon a funeral.

You from above shall hear each day
One dirge dispatch'd unto your clay;
These, your own anthems, shall become
Your lasting epicedium. Sandys's Paraphrase.

E'PICURE. n. s. [epicureus, Lat.] A follower of Epicurus; a man given wholly to luxury.

Then fly false thanes,
And mingle with the English epicures. Shakesp.

The epicure buckles to study, when shame, or the desire to recommend himself to his mistress, shall make him uneasy in the want of any sort of knowledge. Locke.

EPICU'REAN. adj. Luxurious; contributing to luxury.

Tie up the libertine in a field of feasts,
Keep his brain fuming; epicurean cooks,
Sharpen with cloyless sauce his appetite. Shakesp.

E'PICURISM. n.s [from epicure] Luxury; sensual enjoyment; gross pleasure.

Here you do keep a hundred knights and squires;
Men so disorder'd, so debauch'd, and bold,
That this our court, infected with their manners,
Shews like a riotous inn; epicurism and lust
Make it a tavern or a brothel. Shak. King Lear.

There is not half so much epicurism in any of their most studied luxuries, as a bleeding fame at their mercy. Govern. Tongue.

Some good men have ventured to call munificence, the greatest sensuality, a piece of epicurism. Calamy's Sermons.

To* EPICURI'ZE. v. a. [from Epicurus.] To devour like an epicure. A word not used.

While I could see thee full of eager pain
My greedy eyes epicuriz'd on thine. Flatman.

EPICY'CLE. n. s. [ἐπὶ and κύκλος.] A little circle whose centre is in the circumference of a greater; or a small orb, which, being in the deferent of a planet, is carried along with its motion; and yet, with its own peculiar motion, carries the body of the planet fastened to it round about its proper centre. Harris.

In regard of the epicycle, or lesser orb, wherein it moveth, the motion of the moon is various and unequal. Brown.

Gird the sphere
With centric and eccentric, scribbl'd o'er;
Cycle and epicycle, orb in orb. Milton's Par. Lost.

EPICY'CLOID. n.s. [ἐπικυκλοειδὴς] A curve generated by the revolution of the periphery of a circle along the convex or concave part of another circle. Harris.

EPIDE'MICAL. } adj. [ἐπὶ and δῆμος.]
EPIDE'MICK. }

1. That which falls at once upon great numbers of people, as a plague.

It was conceived not to be an epidemic disease, but to proceed from a maliguity in the constitution of the air, gathered by the predispositions of seasons. Bacon.

As the proportion of epidemical diseases shews the aptness of the air to sudden and vehement impressions, the chronical diseases shew the ordinary temper of the place. Graunt.

2. Generally prevailing; affecting great numbers.

The more epidemical and prevailing this evil is, the more honourable are those who shine as exceptions. South.

He ought to have been busied in losing his money, or in other amusements equally laudable and epidemick among persons of honour. Swift.

3. General; universal. Not used, nor proper.

They're citizens o' th' world, they're all in all; Scotland's a nation epidemical. Cleaveland.

EPIDE'RMIS. n. s. [ἐπιδέρμις.] The scarf-skin of a man's body.

E'PIGRAM. n. s. [epigramma, Lat.] A short poem terminating in a point.

A college of witcrackers cannot flout me out of my humour: do'st thou think I care for a satire or an epigram? Shakesp.

What can be more witty than the epigram of Moore upon the name of Nicolaus, an ignorant physician, that had been the death of thousands? Peacham of Poetry.

I writ
An epigram that boasts more truth than wit. Gay.

EPIGRAMMA'TICAL. } adj. [epigrammaticus, Lat.]
EPIGRAMMA'TICK. }

1. Dealing in epigrams; writing epigrams.

Our good epigrammatical poet, old Godfrey of Winchester, thinketh no ominous forespeaking to lie in names. Camden

2. Suitable to epigrams; belonging to epigrams.

He is every where above conceits of epigrammatick wit and gross hyperboles: he maintains majesty in the midst of plainness; he shines, but glares not; and is stately, without ambition. Addis.

He has none of those little points and puerilities that are so often to be met with in Ovid, none of the epigrammatick turns of Lucan; none of those swelling sentiments which are so frequent in Statius and Claudian; none of those mixt embellishments of Tasso. Addison.

EPIGRA'MMATIST. n. s. [from epigram.] One who writes or deals in epigrams.

A jest upon a poor wit, at first might have had an epigrammatist for its father, and been afterwards gravely understood by some painful collector. Pope.

Such a customer the epigrammatist Martial meets withal, one who, after he had walked through the fairest street twice or thrice, cheapening jewels, plate, rich hangings, came away with a wooden dish. Peacham.

EPI'GRAPHIE. n. s. [ἐπιγραφὴ.] An inscription on a statue. Dict.

E'PILEPSY. n. s. [ἐπίληψις.] A convulsion, or convulsive motion of the whole body, or some of its parts, with a loss of sense. A convulsive motion happens when the blood, or nervous fluid, runs into any part with so great violence, that the mind cannot restrain them. Quincy.

My lord is fell into an epilepsy:
This is the second fit. Shakesp. Othello.

Melancholy distempers are deduced from spirits drawn from that cacochymia; the phrenitis from cholerick spirits, and the epilepsy from fumes. Floyer on the Humours.

EPILE'PTICK. adj. [from epilepsy.] Convulsed; diseased with an epilepsy.

A plague upon your epileptick visage!
Smile you my speeches, as I were a fool? Shakesp

*Epileptick*s ought to breathe a pure air, unaffected with any steams, even such as are very fragrant. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

E'PILOGUE. n. s. [epilogus, Lat.] The poem or speech at the end of a play.

If it be true that good wine needs no bush, 'tis true that a good play needs no epilogue; yet to good wine they do use good bushes, and good plays prove the better by the help of good epilogues. Shakesp.

Are you mad, you dog?
I am to rise and speak the epilogue. Dryden

EPINY'CTIS. n. s. [ἐπινυκτὶς.] A sore at the corner of the eye.

The epinyctis is of the bigness of a lupin, of a dusky red, and sometimes of a livid and pale colour, with great inflammation and pain. Wiseman's Surgery.

EPI'PHANY. n. s. [ἐπιφάνια.] A church festival, celebrated on the twelfth day after Christmas, in commemoration of our Saviour's being manifested to the world, by the appearance of a miraculous blazing star, which conducted the magi to the place where he was. Dict.

EPIPHONE'MA. n. s. [ἐπιφώνημα.] An exclamation; a conclusive sentence not closely connected with the words foregoing.

I know a gentleman, who made it a rule in reading to skip over all sentences where he spied a note of admiration at the end. If those preachers who abound in epiphonemas would but look about them, they would find one part of their congregation out of countenance and the other asleep, except perhaps an old female beggar or two in the aisles; who, if they be sincere, may probably groan at the sound. Swift.

EPI'PHORA. n. s [ἐπιφορὰ.] An inflammation of any part, but more especially a defluxion of humours on the eyes. Harris.

EPIPHYLLOSPE'RMOUS. adj. [from ἐπὶ, φύλλον and σπέρμα.] Is applied to plants that bear their seed on the back part of their leaves. Harris.

EPI'PHYSIS. n. s. [ἐπιφυσις.] Accretion; the part added by accretion; one bone growing to another by simple contiguity, without any proper articulation. Quincy.

The epiphysis of the os femoris is a distinct bone from it in a child, whereas in a man they do entirely unite. Wiseman.

EPI'PLOCE. n. s. [ἐπιπλοκὴ.] A figure of rhetorick, by which one aggravation, or striking circumstance, is added in due gradation to another; as, he not only spared his enemies, but continued them in employment; not only continued, but advanced them.

EPI'SCOPACY. n. s. [episcopatus, Lat.] The government of the church established by the apostles.

The bishops durst not contest with the assemblys in jurisdiction; so that there was little more than the name of episcopacy preserved. Clarendon.

Prelacy itself cannot be proved by prescription, since episcopacy is not prescribed by any time whatsoever. Ayliffe.

EPI'SCOPAL. adj. [from episcopus, Lat.]

1. Belonging to a bishop.

The plot of disciplining [illegible] to erect a popular authority of elders, and to take away episcopal jurisdiction. Hooker.

2. Vested in a bishop.

The apostle commands Titus not only to be a pattern of good works himself, but to use his episcopal authority in exhorting every rank and order of men. Rogers.

EPI'SCOPATE. n. s. [episcopatus, Lat.] A bishoprick; the office and dignity of a bishop.

EPISODE. n. s. [ἐπεισοδὴ.] An incidental narrative, or digression in a poem, separable from the main subject, yet rising naturally from it.

The poem hath no other episodes than such as naturally arise from the subject. Addison's Spect.

EPISO'DICAL. } adj. [from episode.] Con-
EPISO'DICK. } tained in an episode; pertaining to an episode.

Episodical ornaments, such as descriptions and narrations, were delivered to us from the observations of Aristotle. Dryden.

I discover the difference between the episodick and principal action, as well as the nature of episodes. Notes on the Odyssey.

EPISPA'STICK. n. s. [ἐπὶ and σπάω.]

1. Drawing.
2. Blistering. This is now the more frequent, though less proper sense.

The matter ought to be solicited to the lower parts, by fomentations, bathing, epispasticks, and blistering. Arbuthnot.

EPI'STLE. n. s. [ἐπιστολὴ.] A letter. This word is seldom used but in poetry, or on occasions of dignity and solemnity.

When loose epistles violate chaste eyes,
She half consents who silently denies. Dryden.

EPI'STOLARY. adj. [from epistle.]

1. Relating to letters; suitable to letters.
2. Transacted by letters.

I shall carry on an epistolary correspondence between the two heads. Addison.

EPI'STLER n. s. [from epistle.] A scribbler of letters.

E'PITAPH. n. s. [ἐπιτάφιος.] An inscription upon a tomb.

Live still, and write mine epitaph. Shakesp.
Some thy lov'd dust in Parian stones enshrine,
Others immortal epitaphs design;
With wit and strength that only yields to thine.
Smith.

EPITHALA'MIUM. n. s. [ἐπὶ θάλαμος.] A nuptial song; a compliment upon marriage.

I presume to invite you to these sacred nuptials: the epithalamium sung by a crowned muse. Sandys.

The forty-fifth psalm is an epithalamium to Christ and the church, or to the lamb and his spouse. Burnet.

E'PITHEM. n. s. [ἐπιθημα.] A liquid medicament externally applied.

Epithems, or cordial applications, are justly applied unto the left breast. Brown's Vulgar Errours

Cordials and epithems are also necessary, to resist the putrefaction, and strengthen the vitals. Wisem.

E'PITHET. n. s. [ἐπιθετον.]

1. An adjective denoting any quality good or bad: as, the verdant grove, the craggy mountain's lofty head.

I affirm with phlegm, leaving the epithets of false, scandalous, and villanous to the author. Swift.

2. It is used by some writers improperly for title, name.

The epithet of shades belonged more properly to the darkness than the refreshment. Decay of Piety.

3. It is used improperly for phrase, expression.

For which of my good parts did you first suffer love for me?——

Suffer love! a good epithet: I do suffer love indeed; for I love thee against my will. Shak.

EPI'TOME. n. s. [ἐπιτομὴ.] Abridgement; abbreviature; compendious abstract; compendium.

This is a poor epitome of your's,
Which, by th' interpretation of full time,
May shew like all yourself. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

Epitomes are helpful to the memory, and of good private use; but set forth for publick monuments, accuse the industrious writers of delivering much impertinency. Wotton.

It would be well, if there were a short and plain epitome made, containing the most material heads. Locke.

Such abstracts and epitomes may be reviewed in their proper places. Watts's Improv. of the Mind.

To E'PITOMISE. v. a. [from epitome.]

1. To abstract; to contract into a narrow space.

Who did the whole world's soul contract, and drove
Into the glasses of your eyes;
So made such mirrours and such spies,
That they did all to you epitomise. Donne.

If the ladies take a liking to such a diminutive race, we should see mankind epitomised, and the whole species in miniature. Addison.

2. Less properly, to diminish by amputation; to curtail.

We have epitomized many particular words, to the detriment of our tongue. Addison's Spect.

EPI'TOMISER. } n. s. [from epitomise.]
EPI'TOMIST. } An abridger; an abstracter; a writer of epitomes.

E'POCH. } n. s. [ἐποχὴ.] The time at
EPO'CHA. } which a new computation is begun; the time from which dates are numbered.

Moses distinctly computes by certain intervals, memorable æras and epochas, or terms of time. Brown.

These are the practices of the world, since the year sixty; the grand epoch of falsehood as well as debauchery. South.

Some lazy ages, lost in sleep and ease,
No action leave to busy chronicles:
Such whose supine felicity but makes
In story chasms, in epochas mistakes. Dryden.

Their several epochas or beginnings, as from the creation of the world, from the flood, from the first olympiad, from the building of Rome, or from any remarkable passage or accident, give us a pleasant prospect into the histories of antiquity and of former ages. Holder on Time.

Time is always reckoned from some known parts of this sensible world, and from some certain epochs marked out to us by the motions observable in it. Locke.

Time, by necessity compell'd, shall go
Through scenes of war, and epochas of woe. Prior.

EPO'DE. n. s. [ἐποδὸς.] The stanza following the strophe and antistrophe.

EPOPE'E. n. s. [ἐποποιὸς.] An epick or heroick poem.

Tragedy borrows from the epopee, and that which borrows is of less dignity, because it has not of its own. Dryden's Virgil.

EPULA'TION. n. s. [epulatio, Lat.] Banquet; feast.

Contented with bread and water, when he would dine with Jove, and pretended to epulation, he desired no other addition than a piece of cheese. Brown's Vulg. Err.

EPULO'TICK. n. s. [ἐπουλωτικὸς.] A cicatrising medicament.

The ulcer, incarned with common sarcoticks, and the ulcerations about it, were cured by ointment of tuty, and such like epuloticks. Wiseman of Inflammation.

EQUABI'LITY. n. s. [from equable.] Equality to itself; evenness; uniformity.

For the celestial bodies, the equability and constancy of their motions argue them ordained by Wisdom. Ray.

The equability of the temperature of the air rendered the Asiaticks lazy. Arbuthnot on Air.

E'QUABLE. adj. [æquabilis, Lat.] Equal to itself; even; uniform in respect to form, motion, or temperature.

He would have the vast body of a planet to be as elegant and round as a factitious globe represents it; to be every where smooth and equable, and as plain as the elysian fields. Bentley.

Nothing abates acrimony of the blood more than an equable motion of it, neither too swift nor too slow; for too quick a motion produceth an alkaline, and too slow an acid acrimony. Arbuthnot.

E'QUABLY. adv [from equable.] Uniformly; in the same tenour; evenly; equally to itself.

If bodies move equably in concentrick circles, and the squares of their periodical times be as the cubes of their distances from the common centre, their centripetal forces will be reciprocally as the squares of the distances. Cheyne.

E'QUAL. adj. [æqualis, Lat.]

1. Like another in bulk, excellence, or any other quality that admits comparison; neither greater nor less; neither worse nor better.

If thou be among great men, make not thyself equal with them. Eccles.

Equal lot
May join us; equal joy, as equal love. Milton.

Although there were no man to take notice of it, every triangle would contain three angles equal to two right angles. Hale.

2. Adequate to any purpose.

The Scots trusted not their own numbers, as equal to fight with the English. Clarendon.

3. Even; uniform.

He laughs at all the vulgar cares and fears,
At their vain triumphs, and their vainer tears;
An equal temper in his mind he found,
When fortune flatter'd him, and when she frown'd.
Dryden.

Think not of me: perhaps my equal mind
May learn to bear the fate the gods allot me.
Smith.

4. In just proportion.

It is not permitted me to make my commendation equal to your merit. Dryden's Fab. Dedication.

5. Impartial; neutral.

Each to his proper fortune stand or fall;
Equal and unconcern'd I look on all:
Rutilians, Trojans, are the same to me,
And both shall draw the lots their fates decree.
Dryden's Æneid.

6. Indifferent.

They who are not disposed to receive them, may let them alone, or reject them; it is equal to me. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.

7. Equitable; advantageous alike to both parties.

He submitted himself, and sware to all equal conditions. Mac.

8. Being upon the same terms.

They made the married, orphans, widows, yea, and the aged also, equal in spoils with themselves. Mac

E'QUAL. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. One not inferior or superior to another.

He is enamoured on Hero: I pray you, dissuade him from her; she is no equal for his birth. Shakesp. Much Ado.

He would make them all equals to the citizens of Rome. 2 Mac ix. 15.

Those who were once his equals, envy and defame him, because they now see him their superior; and those who were once his superiors, because they look upon him as their equal. Addison.

To my dear equal in my native land,
My plighted vow I gave: I his received:
Each swore with truth, with pleasure each believ'd:
The mutual contract was to heav'n convey'd. Prior.

2. One of the same age.

I profited in the Jews religion above many my equals in mine own nation. Gal. i. 14.

To EQUAL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To make one thing or person equal to another.
2. To rise to the same state with another person.

I know no body so like to equal him, even at the age he wrote most of them as yourself. Trumbull to Pope.

3. To be equal to.

One whose all not equals Edward's moiety. Shak.

4. To recompense fully; to answer in full proportion.

She sought Sicheus through the shady grove,
Who answer'd all her cares, and equal'd all her love. Dryden.
Nor you, great queen, these offices repent,
Which he will equal, and perhaps augment. Dryd.

To E'QUALISE. v. a. [from equal.]

1. To make even.
To equalise accounts we will allow three hundred years, and so long a time as we can manifest from the Scripture. Brown.

2. To be equal to: a sense not used.
That would make the moved body, remaining what it is, in regard of its bigness, to equalise and fit a thing bigger than it is. Digby.
Ye lofty beeches, tell this matchless dame,
That if together ye fed all one flame,
It could not equalise the hundredth part
Of what her eyes have kindled in my heart. Waller.

EQUA'LITY. n. s. [from equal.]

1. Likeness with regard to any quantities compared.
Equality of two domestick powers,
Breeds scrupulous faction. Shak. Ant. and Cleop.

2. The same degree of dignity.
One shall rise,
Of proud ambition; who, not content
With fair equality, fraternal state,
Will arrogate dominion undeserv'd
Over his brethren. Milton's Paradise Lost.
According to this equality wherein God hath placed all mankind, with relation to himself, in all the relations between man and man there is a mutual dependance. Swift

3. Evenness; uniformity; constant tenour; equability.
Measure out the lives of men, and periodically define the alterations of their tempers, conceive a regularity in mutations, with an equality in constitutions, and forget that variety which physicians therein discover. Brown's Vulg. Err.

E'QUALLY. adv. [from equal.]

1. In the same degree with another person or thing; alike.
To reconcile men's vices to their fears is the aim of all the various schemes and projects of sin, and is equally intended by atheism and immorality. Rogers.
The covetous are equally impatient of their condition, equally tempted with the wages of unrighteousness, as if they were indeed poor. Rogers.

2. Evenly; equably; uniformly.
If the motion of the sun were as unequal as of a ship, sometimes slow, and at others swift; or, if being constantly equally swift, it yet was not circular, and produced not the same appearances, it would not help us to measure time more than the motion of a comet does. Locke.

3. Impartially.
We shall use them,
As we shall find their merits and our safety
May equally determine. Shakesp. King Lear.

E'QUALNESS. n. s. [from equal.] Equality.
Let me lament
That our stars unreconcileable should have divided
Our equalness to this. Shakesp.

EQUAN'GULAR. adj. [from equus and angulus, Lat.] Consisting of equal angles.

EQUANI'MITY. n. s. [æquanimitas, Lat.] Evenness of mind, neither elated nor depressed.

EQUA'NIMOUS. adj. [æquanimis, Lat.] Even; not dejected; not elated.

EQUA'TION. n. s. [æquare, Lat.] The investigation of a mean proportion collected from the extremities of excess and defect, to be applied to the whole.
We are to find out the extremities on both sides, and from and between them the middle daily motions of the sun along the Ecliptick; and to frame tables of equation of natural days, to be applied to the mean motion by addition or subtraction, as the case shall require. Holder on Time.
By an argument taken from the equations of the times of the eclipses of Jupiter's satellites, it seems that light is propagated in time, spending in its passage from the sun to us about seven minutes of time. Newton's Opticks.

EQUA'TION. [In algebra.] Is an expression of the same quantity in two dissimilar terms, but of equal value; as, $3s. = 36d.$ Dict.

EQUA'TION. [In astronomy.] The difference between the time marked out by the sun's apparent motion, and the time that is measured by its real or middle motion; according to which clocks and watches ought to be adjusted. Dict.

EQUA'TOR. n. s. [æquator, Lat.] The equator on the earth, or equinoctial in the heavens, is a great circle, whose poles are the poles of the world. It divides the globe into two equal parts, the northern and southern hemispheres. It passes through the east and west points of the horizon; and at the meridian is raised as much above the horizon as is the complement of the latitude of the place. Whenever the sun comes to this circle, it makes equal days and nights all round the globe, because he then rises due east and sets due west, which he doth at no other time of the year. Harris.
By reason of the convexity of the earth, the eye of man, under the equator, cannot discover both the poles; neither would the eye, under the poles, discover the sun in the equator. Brown's Vulg. Err.
On the other side the equator, there is mush land still remaining undiscovered. Ray on the Creation.
Rocks rich in gems, and mountains big with mines,
That on the high equator ridgy rise,
Whence many a bursting stream auriferous plays. Thomson.

EQUATO'RIAL. adj. [from equator.] Pertaining to the equator; taken at the equator.
The planets have spheroidical figures, and obliquities of their equatorial to their ecliptick planes. Cheyne.

E'QUERRY. n. s. [ecurie, Dut] Master of the horse.

EQUE'STRIAN. adj. [equestris, Lat.]

1. Being on horseback.
An equestrian lady appeared upon the plains. Spectator.

2. Skilled in horsemanship.

3. Belonging to the second rank in Rome.

EQUICRU'RAL. } adj. [æquus and crus,
EQUICRU'RE. } Lat.]

1. Having legs of an equal length.

2. Having the legs of an equal length, and longer than the base; isosceles.
An equicrure triangle goes upon a certain proportion of length and breadth. Digby on the Soul.
We successively draw lines from angle to angle until seven equicrural triangles be described. Brown.

EQUIDI'STANT. adj. [equus and distans, Lat.] At the same distance.

EQUIDI'STANTLY. adv. [from equidistant.] At the same distance.
The fixt stars are not all placed in the same concave superfices, and equidistant from us, as they seem to be. Ray.
The liver, seated on the right side, by the subclavian division equidistantly communicates unto either arm. Brown.

EQUIFORMITY. n. s. [æquus and forma, Lat.] Uniform equality.
No diversity or difference, but a simplicity of parts and equiformity of motion. Brown's Vulg. Err.

EQUILA'TERAL. adj. [equus and latus, Lat.] Having all sides equal.
Circles or squares, or triangles equilateral, which are all figures of equal lines, can differ but in greater or lesser. Bacon.
Trifling futility appears in their twelve signs of the zodiack and their aspects, why no more aspects than diametrically opposite, and such as make equilateral figures? Bentley.

To EQUILI'BRATE. v. a. [from equilibrium.] To balance equally; to keep even with equal weight on each side.
If the point of the knife, drawn over the loadstone, have in this affriction been drawn from the equator of the loadstone towards the pole, it will attract one of the extremes of an equilibrated magnetick needle. Boyle's Experiments.
The bodies of fishes are equilibrated with the water in which they swim. Arbuthnot on Air.

EQUILIBRA'TION. n. s. [from equilibrate.] Equipoise; the act of keeping the balance even.
The accession of bodies upon, or secession thereof from the earth's surface, perturb not the equilibration of either hemisphere. Brown's Vulg. Err.
In so great a variety of motions, as running, leaping, and dancing, nature's laws of equilibration are observed. Derham.

EQUILI'BRIUM. n. s. [Lat.]

1. Equipoise; equality of weight.

2. Equality of evidence, motives, or powers of any kind.

Their whole counsel is condemned, as having either proceeded from the blindness of those times, or from negligence, or from desire of honour and glory, or from an erroneous opinion that such things might be for a while. Hooker.

A wonderful erroneous observation that walketh about, is commonly received, contrary to all the true account of time and experience. Bacon.

The phænomena of light have been hitherto explained by supposing that they arise from new modifications of the rays, which is an erroneous supposition. Newton's Opticks.

ERRO'NEOUSLY. adv. [from erroneous.] By mistake; not rightly.

The minds of men are erroneously persuaded, that it is the will of God to have those things done which they fancy. Hooker.

I could not discover the lenity of this sentence; but conceived it, perhaps, erroneously, rather to be rigorous than gentle. Gulliver.

ERRO'NEOUSNESS. n.s. [from erroneous.] Physical falsehood; inconformity to truth.

The phænomena may be explained by this hypothesis, whereof he demonstrates the truth, together with the erroneousness of ours. Boyle.

ERROUR. n. s. [error, Lat.]

1. Mistake; involuntary deviation from truth.

Errour is a mistake of our judgment giving assent to that which is not true. Locke.

Oh, hateful errour, melancholy's child!
Why do'st thou shew to the apt thoughts of men,
The things that are not? Shakesp.

2. A blunder; an act or assertion in which a mistake is committed.

In religion,
What damned errour, but some sober brow
Will bless it? Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

He look'd like nature's errour, as the mind
And body were not of a piece design'd,
But made for two, and by mistake in one were join'd. Dryden.

3. Roving excursion; irregular course.

What brought you living to the Stygian state?
Driv'n by the winds and errours of the sea,
Or did you Heav'n's superiour doom obey? Dryd.

4. [In theology.] Sin.
Blood he offered for himself, and for the errours of the people. Heb. ix. 7.
5. [In law, more especially in our common law.] An errour in pleading, or in the process; and the writ, which is brought for remedy of this oversight, is called a writ of errour, which lies to redress false judgment given in any court of record. Cowel.

ERUP'TION. n. s. [eruptio, Lat.]
1. The act of breaking or bursting forth from any confinement.
Finding themselves pent in by the exterior earth, they pressed with violence against that arch, to make it yield and give way to their dilatation and eruption. Burnet's Theory.
2. Burst; emission; something forcing itself out suddenly.
In part of Media there are eruptions of flames out of plains. Bacon's Natural History.
Upon a signal given the eruption began; fire and smoak, mixed with several unusual prodigies and figures, made their appearance. Addison's Guardian.
3. Sudden excursion of an hostile kind.
Thither, if but to pry, shall be perhaps
Our first eruption, thither or elsewhere;
For this infernal pit shall never hold
Celestial spirits in bondage. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Such command we had,
To see that none thence issu'd forth a spy,
Or enemy, while God was in his work;
Lest he, incens'd at such eruption bold,
Destruction with creation might have mix'd. Milt.
4. Violent exclamation.
To his secretary, whom he laid in a pallet near him for natural ventilation of his thoughts, he would, in the absence of all other ears and eyes, break out into bitter and passionate eruptions. Wotton's Life of Buckingham.

ESCAPA'DE. n. s. [Fr.] Irregular motion of a horse.
He with a graceful pride,
While his rider every hand survey'd,
Sprung loose, and flew into an escapade;
Not moving forward, yet with every bound
Pressing, and seeming still to quit his ground.
Dryden.

To ESCA'PE. v. a. [echaper, Fr.]
1. To obtain exemption from; to obtain security from; to fly; to avoid.
Since we cannot escape the pursuit of passions, and perplexity of thoughts, there is no way left but to endeavour all we can either to subdue or divert them. Temple.
Had David died sooner, how much trouble had he escaped, which by living he endured in the rebellion of his son? Wake.
2. To pass unobserved by one.
Men are blinded with ignorance and errour: many things may escape them, in many they may be deceived Hooker.
'Tis still the same, although their airy shape
All but a quick poetick sight escape. Denham.
The reader finds out those beauties of propriety in thought and writing, which escaped him in the tumult and hurry of representing. Dryden.

To ESCA'PE. v. n. To fly; to get out of danger; to avoid punishment or harm.
Benhadad, the king of Syria, escaped on horse. Chronicles.
They escaped all safe to land. Acts, xxvii. 44.
Escape for thy life; look not behind thee, neither stay thou in all the plain: escape to the mountain, lest thou be consumed. Genesis.
Whoso pleaseth God shall escape from her, but the sinner shall be taken by her. Eccl. vii. 26.
He might put on a hat, a muffler, and a kerchief, and so escape. Shak. Merry Wives of Windsor.
To convince us that there was no way to escape by climbing up to the mountains, he assures us that the highest were all covered. Woodward.
Laws are not executed, men of virtue are disgraced, and murderers escape. Watts's Logick.

ESCA'PE. n. s. [from the verb.]
1. Flight; the act of getting out of danger.
I would hasten my escape from the windy storm and tempest. Psalm lv. 7.
He enjoyed neither his escape nor his honour long; for he was hewn in pieces. Hayward.
Men of virtue have had extraordinary escapes out of such dangers as have enclosed them, and which have seemed inevitable. Addison.
2. Excursion; sally.
We made an escape, not so much to seek our own,
As to be instruments of your safety. Denham.
3. [In law.] Violent or privy evasion out of some lawful restraint. For example, if the sheriff, upon a capias directed unto him, takes a person, and endeavours to carry him to gaol, and he in the way, either by violence or by flight, breaks from him, this is called an escape. Cowel.
4. Excuse; subterfuge; evasion.
St. Paul himself did not despise to remember whatsoever he found agreeable to the word of God among the heathen, that he might take from them all escape by way of ignorance. Raleigh.
5. Sally; flight; irregularity.
Thousand 'scapes of wit,
Make thee the father of their idle dreams,
And rack thee in their fancies. Shakesp.
Loose 'scapes of love. Milton.
6. Oversight; mistake.
In transcribing there would be less care taken, as the language was less understood, and so the escapes less subject to observation.
Brerewood on Lang

ESCA'RGATOIRE. n. s. [Fr.] A nursery of snails.
At the Capuchins I saw escargatoires, which I took the more notice of, because I do not remember to have met with any thing of the same kind in other countries. It is a square place boarded in, and filled with a vast quantity of large snails that are esteemed excellent food, when they are well dressed. Addison.

ESCHALOT. n. s [Fr.] A plant.
Eschalots are now from France become an English plant, managed after the same manner as garlick; only they are to be set earlier, and taken up as soon as the leaves begin to wither, lest the Winter kills them. Mortimer's Husbandry.

ES'CHAR. n. s. [ἐσχάρα.] A hard crust or scar made by hot applications.

When issues are made, or bones exposed, the eschar should be cut out immediately. Sharp's Surg.

ESCHA'ROTICK. adj. [from eschar.] Caustick; having the power to sear or burn the flesh.

ESCHA'ROTICK. n. s. A caustick application.

Escharoticks applied of ash-ashes, or blistering plaster. Floyer.

ESCHE'AT. n. s. [from the French escheoir.] Any lands, or other profits, that fall to a lord within his manor by forfeiture, or the death of his tenant, dying without heir general or special. Escheat is also used sometimes for the place in which the king, or other lord, has escheats of his tenants. Thirdly, escheat is used for a writ, which lies where the tenant, having estate of fee-simple in any lands or tenements holden of a superiour lord, dies seised, without heir general or especial. Cowel.

If the king's ordinary courts of justice do not protect the people, if he have no certain revenue or escheats, I cannot say that such a country is conquered. Davies on Ireland.

To ESCHE'AT. v. a. [from the noun.] To fall to the lord of the manor by forfeiture, or for want of heirs.

In the last general wars there, I knew many good freeholders executed by martial law, whose lands were thereby saved to their heirs, which should have otherwise escheated to her majesty. Spenser on Ireland.

He would forbear to alienate any of the forfeited escheated lands in Ireland, which should accrue to the crown by reason of this rebellion. Clarendon.

ESCHEA'TOR. n. s. [from escheat.] An officer that observes the escheats of the king in the county whereof he is escheator, and certifies them into the exchequer. Cowel.

At a Bartholomew fair at London, an escheator of the city arrested a clothier, and seized his goods. Camden's Remains.

To ESCH'EW. v. a. [escheoir, old Fr.] To fly; to avoid; to shun; to decline. A word almost obsolete.

She was like a young fawn, who, coming in the wind of the hunters, doth not know whether it be a thing or no to be eschewed. Sidney.

So let us, which this change of weather view,
Change eke our minds, and former lives amend;
The old year's sins forepast let us eschew,
And fly the faults with which we did offend. Spens.

He who obeys, destruction shall eschew;
A wise man knows both when and what to do. San.

Of virtue and vice, men are universally to practise the one, and eschew the other. Atterbury.

ESCHU'TCHEON. n. s. The shield of the family; the picture of the ensigns armorial.

Eschutcheon is a French word, from the Latin scutum leather; and hence cometh our English word buckler, leye in the old Saxon signifying leather, and buck or bock a buck or stag; of whose skins, quilted close together with horn or hard wood, the ancient Britons made their shields. Peacham.

There be now, for martial encouragement, some degrees and orders of chivalry, and some remembrance perhaps upon the eschutcheon. Bacon.

We will pass over the eschutcheons of the tribes of Israel, as they are usually described in the maps of Canaan. Brown.

ESCO'RT. n. s. [escort, Fr.] Convoy; guard from place to place.

To ESCO'RT. v. a. [escorter, Fr.] To convoy; to guard from place to place.

ESCOT. n. s. [Fr.] A tax paid in boroughs and corporations towards the support of the community, which is called scot and lot.

To ESCO'T. v. a. [from the noun.] To pay a man's reckoning; to support.

What, are they children? Who maintains them? How are they escoted? Shakesp. Hamlet.

ESCO'UT. n. s. [escouter, Fr.] Listeners or spies; persons sent for intelligence. Now scout.

They were well entrenched, having good escout abroad, and sure watch within. Hayward.

ESCRI'TOIR. n. s. [Fr.] A box with all the implements necessary for writing. Pronounced scritore.

ESCU'AGE. n. s. [from escu, Fr. a shield.] Escuage, that is, service of the shield, is either uncertain or certain. Escuage uncertain is likewise twofold: first, where the tenant by his tenure is bound to follow his lord, going in person to the king's wars so many days. The days of such service seem to have been rated by the quantity of the land so holden: as, if it extend to a whole knight's fee, then the tenant was bound thus to follow his lord forty days. A knight's fee was so much land as, in those days, was accounted sufficient living for a knight; and that was six hundred and eighty acres as some think, or eight hundred as others, or 15*l. per annum*. Sir Thomas Smith saith, that census equestris is 40*l.* revenue in free lands. If the land extend but to half a knight's fee, then the tenant is bound to follow his lord but twenty days. The other kind of this escuage uncertain is called Castleward, where the tenant is bound to defend a castle. Escuage certain is where the tenant is set at a certain sum of money to be paid in lieu of such uncertain services. Cowel.

E'SCULENT. adj. [esculentus, Lat.] Good for food; eatable.

I knew a man that would fast five days; but the same man used to have continually a great wisp of herbs that he smelled on, and some esculent herbs of strong scent, as garlick. Bacon.

ES'CULENT. n. s. Something fit for food.

This cutting off the leaves in plants, where the root is the esculent, as radish and parsnips, it will make the root the greater, and so it will do to the heads of onions; and where the fruit is the esculent, by strengthening the root, it will make the fruit also the greater. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

ESPA'LIER. n. s. Trees planted and cut so as to join.

Plant your fairest tulips in places of shelter, and under espaliers. Evelyn's Kalendar.

Behold Villario's ten years toil complete,
His arbours darken, his espaliers meet. Pope.

ESPA'RCET. n. s. [medica, or trifolium, Lat.] A kind of saint-foin. A plant. Mortimer.

ESPECIAL. adj. [specialis, Lat.] Principal; chief.

They had th' especial engines been, to rear
His fortunes up. Daniel's Civil War.

ESPE'CIALLY. adv. [from especial.] Principally; chiefly; particularly; in an uncommon degree above any other.

I somewhat marvel, that they especially should think it absurd to oppose church government, a plain matter of action, unto matter of faith, who know that themselves divide the gospel into doctrine and discipline. Hooker.

Would you proceed especially against Caius Marcius? Shakesp.

This delight children take in doing of mischief, but more especially the pleasure they take to put any thing to pain that is capable of it, I cannot persuade myself to be any other than a foreign and introduced disposition. Locke.

Providence hath planted in all men a natural desire and curiosity of knowing things to come; and such things especially as concern our particular happiness, or the general fate of mankind. Burnet.

ESPERA'NCE. n. s. [Fr.] Hope. Not used.

To be worst,
The lowest, most dejected things of fortune,
Stands still in esperance, lives not in fear. Shakesp. King Lear

Yet there is a credence in my heart,
An esperance so obstinately strong,
That doth invert th' attest of eyes and ears. Shak.

ESPIAL. n. s. [Fr. from espier.] A spy; a scout; one sent to bring intelligence. Not used.

Those four garrisons, issuing forth at such convenient times as they shall have intelligence, or espial upon the enemy, will drive him from one side to another. Spenser on Ireland.

As he march'd along,
By your espials were discovered
Two mightier troops. Shakesp.

Spials have inform'd me,
The English in the suburbs close entrench'd,
Went through a secret grate. Shakesp. Hen. VI.

She had some secret espials to look abroad for graceful youths, to make Plantagenets. Bacon's Hen. VII.

ESPLANA'DE. n. s. [Fr.] In fortification, the same with the glacis of the counterscarp originally; but now it is taken for the empty space between the glacis of a citadel and the first houses of the town. Harris.

ESPO'USALS. n. s. without a singular. [sponsalia, Lat. espous, Fr.] The act of contracting or affiancing a man and woman to each other; the act or ceremony of betrothing.

ESPO'USAL. adj. Used in the act of espousing or betrothing.

The ambassador put his leg, stript naked to the knee, between the espousal sheets; that the ceremony might amount to a consummation. Bacon's Hen. VII.

To ESPO'USE. v. a. [espouser, Fr.]

1. To contract or betroth to another: with to.

Deliver me my wife Michal, which I espoused to me. 2 Sam.

2. Or with.

He had received him as a suppliant, protected him as a person fled for refuge, and espoused him with his kinswoman. Bacon.

3. To marry; to wed.

Lavinia will I make my empress,
And in the sacred Pantheon her espouse. Shakesp.

With flowers, garlands, and sweet smelling herbs,
Espoused Eve deck'd first her nuptial bed. Milt.

They soon espous'd; for they with ease were join'd,
Who were before contracted in the mind. Dryden.

If her sire approves,
Let him espouse her to the peer she loves. Pope.

4. To adopt; to take to himself.

In gratitude unto the duke of Bretagne, for his former favours, he espoused that quarrel, and declared himself in aid of the duke Bacon's Hen. VII.

5. To maintain; to defend.

Their gods did not only interest themselves in the event of wars, but also espoused the several parties in a visible corporeal descent. Dryd. Jun Dedi.

The city, army, court, espouse my cause. Dryd.
Men espouse the well-endowed opinions in fashion, and then seek arguments either to make good their beauty, or varnish over their deformity. Locke.
The righteousness of the best cause may be over-balanced by the iniquities of those that espouse it. Smalridge.
The cause of religion and goodness, which is the cause of God, is ours by descent, and we are doubly bound to espouse it. Atterbury.

To ESPY'. v. a. [espier, Fr.]

1. To see things at a distance.
Few there are of so weak capacity but publick evils they easily espy; fewer so patient as not to complain, when the grievous inconveniencies thereof work sensible smart. Hooker.
2. To discover a thing intended to be hid.
He who before he was espied was afraid, after being perceived was ashamed, now being hardly rubbed upon, left both fear and shame, and was moved to anger. Sidney.
3. To see unexpectedly.

ESQUI'RE. n. s. [escuer, Fr.] See SQUIRE.

1. The armour-bearer or attendant on a knight.
2. A title of dignity, and next in degree below a knight. Those to whom this title is now of right due, are all the younger sons of noblemen, and their heirs male for ever; the four esquires of the king's body; the eldest sons of all baronets; so also of all knights of the Bath, and knights batchelors, and their heirs male in the right line; those that serve the king in any worshipful calling, as the serjeant chirurgeon, serjeant of the ewry, master cook, &c. such as are created esquires by the king with a collar of S. S. of silver, as the heralds and serjeants at arms. The chief of some ancient families are likewise esquires by prescription; those that bear any superior office in the commonwealth, as high sheriff of any county, who retains the title of esquire during his life, in respect of the great trust he has had of the posse comitatus. He who is a justice of the peace has it during the time he is in commission, and no longer. Utter barristers, in the acts of parliament for poll-money, were ranked among esquires. Blount.

What, are our English dead?
—Sir Richard Ketley, Davy Gam esquire. Shakesp.

To ESSAY. v. a. [essayer, Fr.]

1. To attempt; to try; to endeavour.
While I this unexampled task essay,
Pass awful gulfs, and beat my painful way,
Celestial dove, divine assistance bring. Blackmore.
No conquest she, but o'er herself desir'd;
No arts essay'd, but not to be admir'd. Pope.
2. To make experiment of.
3. To try the value and purity of metals.
The standard in our mint being now settled, the rules and methods of essaying suited to it should remain unvariable. Locke.

E'SSAY. n. s. [from the verb. The accent is used on either syllable.]

1. Attempt; endeavour.
Fruitless our hopes, though pious our essays;
Your's to preserve a friend, and mine to praise.
Smith.
2. A loose sally of the mind; an irregular indigested piece; not a regular and orderly composition.
My essays, of all my other works, have been most current. Bacon.
Yet modestly he does his work survey,
And calls his finish'd poem an essay. Poem to Rosc.
3. A trial; an experiment.
This treatise prides itself in no higher a title than that of an essay, or imperfect attempt at a subject. Glanville.
He wrote this but as an essay, or taste of my virtue. Shakesp.
Repetitions wear us into a liking of what possibly, in the first essay, displeased us. Locke.
4. First taste of any thing; first experiment.
Translating the first of Homer's Iliads, I intended as an essay to the whole work. Dryd. Fab. Pre.

E'SSENCE. n. s. [essentia, Lat.]

1. Essence is but the very nature of any being, whether it be actually existing or no: a rose in Winter has an essence; in Summer it has existence also. Watts's Log.
One thinks the soul is air; another, fire;
Another, blood diffus'd about the heart;
Another saith, the elements conspire,
And to her essence each doth give a part. Davies.
I could wish the nature of a spirit were more unknown to me than it is, that I might believe its existence, without meddling at all with its essence. More's Divine Dialogues.
He wrote the nature of things upon their names: he could view essences in themselves, and read forms without the comment of their respective properties. South.
2. Formal existence; that which makes any thing to be what it is.
The visible church of Jesus is one in outward profession of those things, which supernaturally appertain to the very essence of Christianity, and are necessarily required in every particular Christian man. Hooker.
3. Existence; the quality of being.
In such cogitations have I stood, with such a darkness and heaviness of mind, that I might have been persuaded to have resigned my very essence. Sidney.
4. Being; existent person.
As far as gods, and heav'nly essences
Can perish. Milton's Par. Lost.
5. Species of existent being.
Here be four of you, as differing as the four elements; and yet you are friends: as for Eupolis, because he is temperate, and without passion, he may be the fifth essence. Bacon.
6. Constituent substance.
For spirits when they please,
Can either sex assume, or both; so soft
And uncompounded is their essence pure;
Not ty'd or manacled with joint or limb. Milton.
7. The cause of existence. This sense is not proper.
She is my essence; and I leave to be,
If I be not by her fair influence
Foster'd, illumin'd, cherish'd, kept alive. Shakesp.
8. [In medicine.] The chief properties or virtues of any simple, or composition collected in a narrow compass.
9. Perfume; odour; scent.
Our humble province is to 'tend the fair;
To save the powder from too rude a gale,
Nor let th' imprison'd essences exhale. Pope.

To ESSENCE. v. a. [from essence.] To perfume; to scent.
The husband rails, from morning to night, at essenced fops and tawdry courtiers. Addison's Spect.

ESSE'NTIAL. adj. [essentialis, Lat.]

1. Necessary to the constitution or existence of any thing.
The discipline of our church, although it be not an essential part of our religion, should not be rashly altered, as the very substance of our religion will be interested in it. Bacon.
From that original of doing good, that is essential to the infinite being of our Creator, we have an excellent copy transcribed. Spratt.
This power cannot be innate and essential to matter; and if it be not essential, it is consequently most manifest it could never supervene to it, unless impressed and infused into it by an immaterial and divine power. Bentley.
A great minister puts you a case, and asks your opinion; but conceals an essential circumstance, upon which the whole weight of the matter turns. Swift.
And if each system in gradation roll,
Alike essential to th' amazing whole,
The least confusion but in one, not all
That system only, but the whole must fall. Pope.
2. Important in the highest degree; principal.
Judgment's more essential to a general,
Than courage. Denham's Sophy.
3. Pure; highly rectified; subtilely elaborated; extracted so as to contain all the virtues of its elemental parts contracted into a narrow compass.
The juice of the seed is an essential oil or balm, designed by nature to preserve the seed from corruption. Arbuthnot.

1. Settlement; fixed state.

All happy peace, and goodly government,
Is settled there in sure establishment. Fairy Queen.

2. Confirmation of something already done; ratification.

He had not the act penned by way of recognition of right; as, on the other side, he avoided to have it by new law; but chose rather a kind of middle way, by way of establishment. Bac. H. VII.

3. Settled regulation; form; model of a government or family.

Now come into that general reformation, and bring in that establishment by which all men should be contained in duty. Spenser.

4. Foundation; fundamental principle; settled law.

The sacred order to which you belong, and even the establishment on which it subsists, have often been struck at; but in vain. Atterbury.

5. Allowance; income; salary.

His excellency, who had the sole disposal of the emperor's revenue, might gradually lessen your establishment. Swift.

6. Settled or final rest.

Whilst we set up our hopes and establishment here, we do not seriously consider that God has provided another and better place for us. Wake.

ESTA'TE n. s. [estat, Fr.]

1. The general interest; the business of the government; the publick. In this sense it is now commonly written state.

Many times the things adduced to judgment may be meum & tuum, when the reason and consequences thereof may reach to point of estate: I call matters of estate, not only the parts of sovereignty, but whatsoever introduceth any great alteration, or dangerous precedent, or concerneth manifestly any great portion of people. Bacon's Essays.

2. Condition of life, with regard to prosperity or adversity.

Thanks to giddy chance,
She cast us headlong from our high estate. Dryden.

3. Condition; circumstances in general.

Truth and certainty are not at all secured by innate principles; but men are in the same uncertain, floating estate with as without them. Locke.

4. Fortune; possession; generally meant of possessions in land, or realities.

She accused us to the king, as though we went about to overthrow him in his own estate. Sidney.

Go, miser! go; for lucre sell thy soul;
Truck wares for wares, and trudge from pole to pole,
That men may say, when thou art dead and gone,
See what a vast estate he left his son! Dryd. Pers.

5. Rank; quality.

Who hath not heard of the greatness of your estate? Who seeth not that your estate is much excelled with that sweet uniting of all beauties. Sidney.

6. A person of high rank. This sense is disused.

She is a dutchess, a great estate. Latimer.

Herod, on his birth-day, made a supper to his lords, high captains, and chief estates of Galilee. Mark, vi. 21.

To ESTATE. v. a. [from the noun.] To settle as a fortune.

Why hath thy queen
Summon'd me hither?
—A contract of true love to celebrate,
And some donation freely to estate
On the blest lovers. Shakesp. Tempest.

To ESTE'EM. v. a. [estimer, Fr. æstimo, Lat.]

1. To set a value whether high or low upon any thing.

The worth of all men by their end esteem,
And then due praise, or due reproach them yield. Spenser.

A knowledge in the works of nature they honour, and esteem highly profound wisdom; howbeit this wisdom saveth not. Hooker.

I preferred her before sceptres and thrones, and esteemed riches nothing in comparison of her. Wisd. vii. 8.

2. To compare; to estimate by proportion.

Besides, those single forms she doth esteem,
And in her balance doth their values try. Davies.

3. To prize; to rate high; to regard with reverence.

Who would not be loved more, though he were esteemed less? Dryden.

4. To hold in opinion; to think; to imagine.

One man esteemeth one day above another; another esteemeth every day alike. Rom. xiv. 5.

To ESTEEM. v. n. To consider as to value: with of.

Many would little esteem of their own lives, yet for remorse of their wives and children, would be withheld from that heinous crime.

ESTE'EM. n. s. [from the verb.] High value; reverential regard.

Who can see,
Without esteem for virtuous poverty,
Severe Fabritius, or can cease t' admire
The ploughman consul in his coarse attire? Dryd.

Both those poets lived in much esteem with good and holy men in orders. Dryden's Fables, Preface.

I am not uneasy that many, whom I never had any esteem for, are likely to enjoy this world after me. Pope.

ESTE'EMER. n. s. [from esteem.] One that highly values; one that sets an high rate upon any thing.

This might instruct the proudest esteemer of his own parts, how useful it is to talk and consult with others. Locke.

E'STIMABLE. adj. [Fr.]

1. Valuable; worth a large price.

A pound of man's flesh, taken from a man,
Is not so estimable or profitable
As flesh of muttons, beefs, or goats. Shakesp.

2. Worthy of esteem; worthy of some degree of honour and respect.

A lady said of her two companions, that one was more amiable, the other more estimable.

You lost one who gave hopes of being, in time, every thing that was estimable and good. Temple.

To E'STIMATE. v. a. [æstimo, Lat.]

1. To rate; to adjust the value of; to judge of any thing by its proportion to something else.

When a man shall sanctify his house to the Lord, then the priest shall estimate it whether it be good or bad: as the priest shall estimate it, so shall it stand. Lev. xxvii. 14.

It is by the weight of silver, and not the name of the piece, that men estimate commodities and exchange them. Locke.

2. To calculate; to compute.

E'STIMATE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Computation; calculation.

Upon a moderate estimate and calculation of the quantity of water now actually contained in the abyss, I found that this alone was full enough to cover the whole globe to the height assigned by Moses. Woodward.

2. Value.

I'd love
My country's good, with a respect more tender,
More holy and profound than mine own life,
My dear wife's estimate, her womb's increase,
The treasure of my loins. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

3. Valuation; assignment of proportional value; comparative judgment.

The only way to come to a true estimate upon the odds betwixt a publick and a private life, is to try both. L'Estrange.

Outward actions can never give a just estimate of us, since there are many perfections of a man which are not capable of appearing in actions. Addison.

ESTIMA'TION. n. s. [from estimate.]

1. The act of adjusting proportional value.

If a man should sanctify unto the Lord some part of a field, the estimation shall be according to the seed. Leviticus.

2. Calculation; computation.

3. Opinion; judgement.

In our own estimation we account such particulars more worthy than those that are already tried and known. Bacon.

4. Esteem; regard; honour.

Crimes there were laid to his charge many, the least whereof being just, had bereaved him of estimation and credit with men. Hooker.

Of your brace of unprizable estimations, the one is but frail, and the other casual. Shakesp.

I know the gentleman
To be of worth and worthy estimation,
And not without desert so well reputed. Shakesp.

I shall have estimation among the multitude, and honour with the elders. Wisd. viii. 10.

A plain reason of the publick honours due to the magistrate is, that he may be in due estimation and reverence. Atterbury.

E'STIMATIVE. adj. [from estimate.] Having the power of comparing and adjusting the preference.

We find in animals an estimative or judicial faculty, an appetition or aversation, and loco-motive faculty answering the will. Hale.

The error is not in the eye, but in the estimative faculty, which mistakingly concludes that colour to belong to the wall, which indeed belongs to the object. Boyle.

ESTIMA'TOR. n. s. [from estimate.] A settler of rates; a computist.

E'STIVAL. adj. [æstivus, Lat.]

To ESTRA'NGE. v. a. [estranger, Fr.]

1. To keep at a distance; to withdraw.
Had we not only cut off their corruptions, but also estranged ourselves from them in things indifferent, who seeth not how greatly prejudicial this might have been to so good a cause? Hooker.
They know it is our custom of simple reading, not for conversion of infidels estranged from the house of God, but for instruction of men baptised, bred, and brought up in the bosom of the church. Hooker.
See, she weeps;
Thinks me unkind, or false, and knows not why
I thus estrange my person from her bed. Dryden.
2. To alienate; to divert from its original use or possessor.
They have estranged this place, and have burnt incense in it to other gods. Jer. xix. 4.
3. To alienate from affection; to turn from kindness to malevolence or indifference.
How comes it now, my husband, oh, how comes it,
That thou art thus estranged from thyself?
Thyself I call it, being strange to me. Shakesp.
Adam, estrang'd in look, and alter'd style,
Speech interrnitted, thus to Eve renew'd. Milton.
I came to grieve a father's heart estrang'd;
But little thought to find a mistress chang'd. Dryd.
I do not know, to this hour, what it is that has estranged him from me. Pope.
4. To withdraw or withhold.
We must estrange our belief from every thing which is not clearly and distinctly evidenced. Glanville's Scepsis.

ESTRANGEMENT. n. s. [from estrange.] Alienation; distance; removal; voluntary abstraction.
Desires, by a long estrangement from better things, come at length perfectly to loath, and fly off from them. South.

ESTRAPA'DE. n. s. [Fr.] The defence of a horse that will not obey, who, to get rid of his rider, rises mightily before; and while his forehand is yet in the air, yerks furiously with his hind legs. Farrier's Dict.

ESTRE'ATE. n. s. [extractum, Lat.] The true copy of an original writing: for example, of amerciaments or penalties, set down in the rolls of a court, to be levied by the bailiff, or other officer, of every man for his offence. A law term. Cowel

ESTRE'PEMENT. n. s. [of the French word estrepier.] Spoil made by the tenant for term of life upon any lands or woods, to the prejudice of him in the reversion. Cowel.

E'STRICH. n. s. [commonly written ostrich; struthiocamelus.] The largest of birds.
To be furious,
Is to be frighted out of fear; and, in that mood,
The dove will peck the estridge. Shakesp.
The peacock, not at thy command, assumes
His glorious train; nor estrich her rare plumes. Sandys.

E'STUANCE. n. s. Heat; warmth. A word rarely found.
Averroes restrained his hilarity, and made no more thereof than Seneca commendeth and was allowable in Cato; that is, a sober incalescence, and regulated estuance from wine. Brown.

E'STUARY. n. s. [æstuarium, Lat.] An arm of the sea; the mouth of a lake or river in which the tide reciprocates; a frith.

To ESTUATE. v. a. [æstuo, Lat.] To swell and fall reciprocally; to boil; to be in a state of violent commotion. Dict.

ESTUA'TION. n. s. [from æstuo, Lat.] The state of boiling; reciprocation of rise and fall; agitation; commotion.
Rivers and lakes that want fermenting parts at the bottom, are not excited into estuations; therefore some seas flow higher than others. Brown.
The motion of the will is accompanied with a sensible commotion of the spirits, and an estuation of the blood. Norris.

E'STURE. n. s. [æstus, Lat.] Violence; commotion.
The seas retain
Not only their outrageous esture there,
But supernatural mischief they expire. Chapman.

To ETCH. v. a. [etzen, Germ.]
1. A way used in making of prints, by drawing with a proper needle upon a copper-plate, covered over with a ground of wax, &c. and well blacked with the smoke of a link, in order to take off the figure of the drawing or print; which having its back-side tinctured with white lead, will, by running over the strucken out lines with a stift, impress the exact figure on the black or red ground; which figure is afterwards with needles drawn deeper quite through the ground, and all the shadows and hatchings put in; and then a wax border being made all round the plate, there is poured on a sufficient quantity of well tempered aqua fortis, which insinuating into the strokes made by the needles, usually eats, in about half an hour, into the figure of the print or drawing on the copper-plate. Harris.
2. To sketch; to draw; to delineate [unless this word be mistaken by Locke for eke.]
There are many empty terms to be found in some learned writers, to which they had recourse to etch out their systems. Locke.
3. [This word is evidently mistaken by Ray for edge.] To move forwards towards one side.
When we lie long awake in the night, we are not able to rest one quarter of an hour without shifting of sides, or at least etching this way and that way, more or less. Ray.

ETCH. n. s. A country word of which I know not the meaning.
When they sow their etch crops, they sprinkle a pound or two of clover on an acre. Mortimer.
Where you find dunging of land make it rank, lay dung upon the etch, and sow it with barley. Mortimer's Husbandry.

ETE'RNAL. adj. [æternus, Lat.]
1. Without beginning or end.
The eternal God is thy refuge. Deuter. xxxiii. 27.
2. Without beginning.
It is a question quite different from our having an idea of eternity, to know whether there were any real being, whose duration has been eternal? Locke.
3. Without end; endless; immortal.
Thou know'st that Banquo and his Fleance lives
—But in them nature's copy's not eternal. Shakesp.
4. Perpetual; constant; unintermitting.
Burnt off'rings morn and ev'ning shall be thine,
And fires eternal in thy temple shine. Dryden.
5. Unchangeable.
Hobbes believed the eternal truths which he opposed. Dryden.

ETE'RNAL. n. s. [eternel, Fr.] One of the appellations of the Godhead.
That law whereby the Eternal himself doth work. Hooker.
The Eternal, to prevent such horrid fray,
Hung out of heav'n his golden scales. Milton.

ETE'RNALIST. n. s. [æternus, Lat.] One that holds the past existence of the world infinite.
I would ask the eternalists what mark is there that they could expect to desire of the novelty of a world, that is not found in this? Or what mark is there of eternity that is found in this? Burnet.

To ETE'RNALIZE. v. a. [from eternal.] To make eternal. Dict.

ETE'RNALLY. adv. [from eternal.]
1. Without beginning or end.
2. Unchangeably; invariably.
That which is morally good, or evil, at any time, or in any case, must be also eternally and unchangeably so, with relation to that time and to that case. South.
3. Perpetually; without intermission.
Bear me, some god, to Baja's gentle seats,
Or cover me in Umbria's green retreats,
Where western gales eternally reside,
And all the seasons lavish all their pride. Addison.

ETE'RNE. adj. [æternus, Lat.] Eternal; perpetual; endless.
The Cyclops hammers fall
On Mars his armour, forg'd for proof eterne. Shak.

ETE'RNITY. n. s. [æternitas, Lat.]
1. Duration without beginning or end.
In this ground his precious root
Still lives, which, when weak times shall be pour'd out
Into eternity, and circular joys
Dancing an endless round, again shall rise. Crashaw.
Thy immortal rhyme
Makes this one short point of time,
To fill up half the orb of round eternity. Cowley.
By repeating the idea of any length of duration which we have in our minds, with all the endless addition of number, we come by the idea of eternity. Locke.
2. Duration without end.
Beyond is all abyss,
Eternity, whose end no eye can reach! Milton.
Eternity, thou pleasing, dreadful thought!
Through what variety of untried being,
Through what new scenes and changes must we pass! Addison

To ETE'RNIZE. v. a. [æterno, Lat.]
1. To make endless; to perpetuate.
I with two fair gifts
Created him endow'd; with happiness
And immortality: that fondly lost,
This other serv'd but to eternize woe. Milton.
2. To make for ever famous; to immortalize.
Mankind by all means seeking to eternize himself, so much the more as he is near his end, doth it by speeches and writings. Sidney.
And well beseems all knights of noble name,
That covet in th' immortal book of fame
To be eternised, that same to haunt. Fairy Queen.
I might relate of thousands, and their names
Eternize here on earth; but those elect
Angels, contented with their fame in heav'n,
Seek not the praise of men. Milton's Par. Lost.
The four great monarchies have been celebrated by the writings of many famous men, who have eternized their fame, and thereby their own. Temple.
Both of them are set on fire by the great actions of heroes, and both endeavour to eternise them. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

3. Creech seems to have accented the first syllable.

Hence came its name, in that the grateful Jove
Hath eternis'd the glory of his love. Creech's Manil.

ETHER. n. s. [æther, Lat. αἰθὴρ.]

1. An element more fine and subtile than air; air refined or sublimed.

If any one should suppose that ether, like our air, may contain particles which endeavour to recede from one another; for I do not know what this ether is; and that its particles are exceedingly smaller than those of air, or even than those of light, the exceeding smallness of its particles may contribute to the greatness of the force by which those particles may recede from one another. Newton.

The parts of other bodies are held together by the eternal pressure of the ether, and can have no other conceivable cause of their cohesion and union. Locke.

2. The matter of the highest regions above.

There fields of light and liquid ether flow,
Purg'd from the pond'rous dregs of earth below. Dryden.

ETHE'REAL. adj. [from ether.]

1. Formed of ether.

Man feels me, when I press th' ethereal plains. Dryden.

2. Celestial; heavenly.

Go, heav'nly guest, ethereal messenger,
Sent from whose sov'reign goodness I adore. Milt.
Thrones and imperial pow'rs, offspring of Heav'n,
Ethereal virtues! Milton's Paradise Lost.

Such as these, being in good part freed from the entanglements of sense and body, are employed, like the spirits above, in contemplating the Divine Wisdom in the works of nature; a kind of anticipation of the ethereal happiness and employment. Glanville.

Vast chain of being, which from God began,
Natures ethereal, human; angel, man. Pope.

ETHE'REOUS. adj. [from ether.] Formed of ether; heavenly.

Behold the bright surface
Of this ethereous mould, whereon we stand. Milt.

ETHICAL. adj. [ἠθικὸς.] Moral; treating on morality.

E'THICALLY. adv. [from ethical.] According to the doctrines of morality.

My subject leads me not to discourse ethically, but Christianly of the faults of the tongue. Government of the Tongue.

E'THICK. adj. [ἠθικὸς.] Moral; delivering precepts of morality. Whence Pope entitled part of his works Ethick Epistles.

E'THICKS. n. s. without the singular. [ἠθικὴ.] The doctrine of morality; a system of morality.

For of all moral virtues, she was all
That ethicks speak of virtues cardinal. Donne.
I will never set politicks against ethicks; for true ethicks are but the handmaid to divinity and religion. Bacon.

Persius professes the stoick philosophy; the most generous amongst all the sects who have given rules of ethicks. Dryden.

If the atheists would live up to the ethicks of Epicurus himself, they would make few or no proselytes from the Christian religion. Bentley.

E'THNICK. adj. [ἐθνικὸς.] Heathen; Pagan; not Jewish; not Christian.

Such contumely as the ethick world durst not offer him, is the peculiar insolence of degenerated Christians. Government of the Tongue.

I shall begin with the agreement of profane, whether Jewish or ethnick, with the Sacred Writings. Grew.

E'THNICKS. n. s. Heathens; not Jews; not Christians.

This first Jupiter of the ethnicks was then the same Cain, the son of Adam. Raleigh's History.

ETIO'LOGY. n. s. [αἰτιολογία.] An account of the causes of any thing, generally of a distemper.

I have not particulars enough to enable me to enter into the etiology of this distemper. Arbuthnot.

ETYMOLO'GICAL. adj. [from etymology.] Relating to etymology; relating to the derivation of words.

Excuse this conceit, this etymological observation. Locke.

ETYMO'LOGIST. n. s. [from etymology.] One who searches out the original of words; one who shows the derivation of words from their original.

ETYMO'LOGY. n. s. [etymologia, Lat. ἔτυμος and λόγος.]

1. The descent or derivation of a word from its original; the deduction of formations from the radical word; the analysis of compound words into primitives.

Consumption is generally taken for any universal diminution and colliquation of the body, which acceptation its etymology implies. Harvey on Cons.

When words are restrained, by common usage, to a particular sense, to run up to etymology, and construe them by dictionary, is wretchedly ridiculous Collier's View of the Stage.

Pelvis is used by comick writers for a looking-glass, by which means the etymology of the word is visible, and pelvidera will signify a lady who looks in her glass. Addison's Spectator.

If the meaning of a word could be learned by its derivation or etymology, yet the original derivation of words is oftentimes very dark. Watts's Log.

2. The part of grammar which delivers the inflections of nouns and verbs.

E'TYMON. n. s. [ἔτυμον.] Origin; primitive word.

Blue hath its etymon from the High Dutch blaw; from whence they call himmel-blue, that which we call sky-colour or heaven's blue. Peacham.

To EVA'CATE. v. a. [vaco, Lat.] To empty out; to throw out.

Dry air opens the surface of the earth to disincarcerate venene bodies, or to evacate them. Harvey on the Plague.

To EVA'CUATE. v. a. [evacuo, Lat.]

1. To make empty; to clear.

There is no good way of prevention but by evacuating clean, and emptying the church. Hooker.

We tried how far the air would manifest its gravity in so thin a medium, as we could make in our receiver, by evacuating it. Boyle.

2. To throw out as noxious, or offensive.

3. To void by any of the excretory passages.

Boerhaave gives an instance of a patient, who by a long use of whey and water, and garden fruits, evacuated a great quantity of black matter, and recovered his senses. Arbuthnot.

4. To make void; to evacate; to nullify; to annul.

The defect, though it would not evacuate a marriage, after cohabitation and actual consummation; yet it was enough to make void a contract. Bacon's Henry VII.

If the prophecies recorded of the Messiah are not fulfilled in Jesus of Nazareth, it is impossible to know when a prophecy is fulfilled, and when not, in any thing or person whatsoever, which would utterly evacuate the use of them. South.

5. To quit; to withdraw from out of a place.

As this neutrality was never observed by the emperour, so he never effectually evacuated Catalonia. Swift.

EVA'CUANT. n. s. [evacuans, Lat.] Medicine that procures evacuation by any passage.

Even to Cato's wish; not fierce, and terrible
Only in strokes. Shakesp. Coriol. Act I. Sc. IV.

Dang'rous rocks,
Which, touching but my gentle vessel's side,
Would scatter all the spices on the stream,
And, in a word, yea even now worth this,
And now worth nothing. Shakesp.

It is not much that the good man ventures; after this life, if there be no God, he is as well as the bad; but if there be a God, is infinitely better, even as much as unspeakable and eternal happiness is better than extreme and endless misery. Tillotson.

He might even as well have employed his time, as some princes have done, in catching moles. Atterb.

2. Notwithstanding; though it was so that.

All I can say for those passages is, that I knew they were bad enough to please even when I wrote them. Dryden.

3. Likewise; not only so, but also.

The motions of all the lights of heaven might afford measures of time, if we could number them; but most of those motions are not evident, and the great lights are sufficient, and serve also to measure even the motions of those others Holder.

Here all their rage, and ev'n their murmurs cease,
And sacred silence reigns, and universal peace.
Pope.

4. So much as.

Books give the same turn to our thoughts that company does to our conversation, without loading our memories, or making us even sensible of the change. Swift.

Ever since that time Lisander has been at the house. Tatler.

Immortal Vida! on whose honour'd brow
The poet's bays and critick's ivy grow,
Cremona now shall ever boast thy name,
As next in place to Mantua, next in fame. Pope.

3. For ever. Eternally; to perpetuity.

Men are like a company of poor insects, whereof some are bees, delighted with flowers and their sweetness; others beetles, delighted with other kinds of viands; which, having enjoyed for a season, they cease to be, and exist no more for ever. Locke.

We'll to the temple: there you'll find your son;
And there be crown'd, or give him up for ever.
A. Phillips.

4. It is sometimes reduplicated.

For ever and for ever, farewell, Cassius.
Shakesp.

I know a lord, who values no lease, though for a thousand years, nor any estate that is not for ever and ever. Temple.

The meeting points the fatal lock dissever
From the fair head, for ever and for ever. Pope.

5. At one time, as ever and anon: that is, at one time and another; now and then.

So long as Guyon with her communed,
Unto the ground she cast her modest eye;
And ever and anon, with rosy red,
The bashful blood her snowy cheeks did dye.
Fairy Queen.

The fat ones would be ever and anon making sport with the lean, and calling them starvelings. L'Estrange.

He lay stretch'd along,
And ever and anon a silent tear
Stole down and trickled from his hoary beard.
Dryden.

EXCE'PTION. n. s. [from except; exceptio, Lat.]

1. Exclusion from the things comprehended in a precept, or position; exclusion of any person from a general law.

When God renewed this charter of man's sovereignty over the creatures to Noah and his family, we find no exception at all; but that Cham stood as fully invested with this right as any of his brethren. South.

Let the money be raised on land, with an exception to some of the more barren parts, that might be tax-free. Addison.

2. It should have from before the rule or law to which the exception refers; but it is sometimes inaccurately used with to.

Pleads, in exception to all gen'ral rules,
Your taste of follies, with our scorn of fools. Pope.

3. Thing excepted or specified in exception.

Every act of parliament was not previous to what it enacted: unless those two, by which the Earl of Stafford and Sir John Fenwick lost their heads may pass for exceptions. Swift.

Who first taught souls enslav'd, and realms undone,
Th' enormous faith of many made for one;
That proud exception to all nature's laws,
T' invert the world and counterwork its cause. Pope.

4. Objection; cavil: with against or to.

Your assertion hath drawn us to make search whether these be just exceptions against the customs of our church, when ye plead that they are the same which the church of Rome hath, or that they are not the same which some other reformed churches have devised. Hooker, Preface.

He may have exceptions peremptory against the jurors, of which he then shall shew cause. Spenser.

Revelations will soon be discerned to be extremely conducible to reforming mens lives, such as will answer all objections and exceptions of flesh and blood against it. Hammond.

I will answer what exceptions they can have against our account, and confute all the reasons and explications they can give of their own. Bentley.

5. Peevish dislike; offence taken: sometimes with to.

I fear'd to shew my father Julia's letter,
Lest he should take exceptions to my love. Shakesp.

1. More than enough; faulty superfluity.

Amongst the heaps of these excesses and superfluities, there is espied the want of a principal part of duty. Hooker

Goodness answers to the theological virtue charity, and admits no excess but error: the desire of power in excess caused the angels to fall; the desire of knowledge in excess caused man to fall; but in charity there is no excess, neither can angel or man come in danger by it. Bacon's Essays.

Members are crooked or distorted, or disproportionate to the rest, either in excess or defect. Ray.

2. Exuberance; state of exceeding; comparative exuberance.

Let the superfluous and lust dicted man,
That braves your ordinance, feel your power quickly;
So distribution shall undo excess,
And each man have enough. Shakesp. King Lear.

The several rays in that white light retain their colorifick qualities, by which those of any sort, whenever they become more copious than the rest, do by their excess and predominance cause their proper colour to appear. Newton's Opticks.

3. Intemperance; unreasonable indulgence in meat and drink.

It was excess of wine that set him on,
And on his more advice we pardon him. Shakesp.

There will be need of temperance in diet; for the body, once heavy with excess and surfeits, hangs plummets on the nobler parts. Duppa.

4. Violence of passion.
5. Transgression of due limits.

A popular sway, by forcing things to give
More than was fit for objects to receive,
Ran to the same extremes; and one excess
Made both, by striving to be greater, less.
Denham.

Hospitality sometimes degenerates into profuseness: even parsimony itself, which sits but ill upon a publick figure, is yet the more pardonable excess of the two. Atterbury.

EXCE'SSIVE. adj. [excessif, French; from excess.]

1. Beyond the common proportion of quantity or bulk.

If the panicum be laid below and about the bottom of a root, it will cause the root to grow to an excessive bigness. Bacon.

1. The act of exhaling or sending out in vapours; emission.
2. The state of evaporating or flying out in vapours; evaporation.
3. That which rises in vapours, and sometimes takes the form of meteors.
No nat'ral exhalation in the sky,
No 'scape of nature, no distemper'd day,
But they would pluck away its nat'ral cause,
And call them meteors, prodigies, and signs. Shakesp.
Moving in so high a sphere, and with so vigorous a lustre, he must needs, as the sun, raise many envious exhalations; which, condensed by a popular odium, are capable to cast a cloud upon the brightest merit and integrity. King Charles.
A fabrick huge
Rose like an exhalation, with the sound
Of dulcet symphonies and voices sweet. Milton.
It is no wonder if the earth be often shaken, there being quantities of exhalations within those mines, or cavernous passages, that are capable of rarefaction and inflammation. Burn.
The growing tow'rs like exhalations rise,
And the huge columns heave into the skies. Pope.

To EXHA'LE. v. a. [exhalo, Lat.]
1. To send or draw out in vapours or fumes.
Yon light is not daylight, I know it well:
It is some meteor that the sun exhales,
To be to thee this night a torch-bearer. Shakesp.
I flattered myself with the hopes that the vapour had been exhaled. Temple.
Fear freezes minds; but love like heat,
Exhales the soul sublime to seek her native seat. Dryden.
2. To draw out.
See, dead Henry's wounds
Open their congeal'd mouths, and bleed afresh!
Blush, blush, thou lump of foul deformity;
For 'tis thy presence that exhales this blood
From cold and empty veins, where no blood dwells! Shakesp.

EXHA'LEMENT. n. s. [from exhale.] Matter exhaled; vapour.
Nor will polish'd amber, although it send forth a gross and corporeal exhalement, be found a long time defective upon the exactest scales. Brown.

To EXHA'UST. v. a.
1. To drain; to diminish; to deprive by draining.
Single men be many times more charitable, because their means are less exhausted. Bacon.
Spermatick matter of a vitious sort abounds in the blood, exhausts it of its best spirits, and derives the flower of it to the seminal vessels. Wiseman.
2. To draw out totally; to draw 'till nothing is left.
Though the knowledge they have left us be worth our study, yet they exhausted not all its treasures: they left a great deal for the industry and sagacity of after-ages. Locke.
The nursling grove
Seems fair awhile, cherish'd with foster earth;
But when the alien compost is exhaust,
Its native poverty again prevails. Philips.

EXHA'USTION. n. s. [from exhaust.] The act of drawing or draining.

EXHA'USTLESS. adj. [from exhaust.] Not to be emptied; not to be all drawn off; inexhaustible.
Of heat and light, what everduring stores
Brought from the sun's exhaustless golden shores,
Through gulphs immense of intervening air,
Enrich the earth and every loss repair. Blackm.

To EXHI'BIT. v. a. [exhibio, Lat.]

Due preference of place and exhibition,
As levels with her breeding. Shakesp.
What maintenance he from his friends receives,
Like exhibition thou shalt have from me. Shakesp.
All was assigned to the army and garrisons there, and she received only a pension or exhibition out of his coffers. Bacon.
He is now neglected, and driven to live in exile upon a small exhibition. Swift.
3. Payment; recompence.
I would not do such a thing for gowns, petticoats, nor caps, nor any petty exhibition. Shak.

EXHI'BITIVE. adj. [from exhibit.] Representative; displaying.
Truths must have an eternal existence in some understanding; or rather, they are the same with that understanding itself, considered as variously exhibitive or representative, according to various modes of inimitability or participation. Norris.

To EXHI'LARATE. v. a. [exhilaro, Lat.] To make cheerful; to cheer; to fill with mirth; to enliven; to glad; to gladden.
The coming into a fair garden, the coming into a fair room richly furnished, a beautiful person, and the like, do delight and exhilarate the spirits much. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

The force of that fallacious fruit,
That with exhilarating vapours bland
About their spirits had play'd, and inmost pow'rs
Made err, was now exhal'd. Milton.

Let them thank
Boon nature, that thus annually supplies
Their vaults, and with her former liquid gifts
Exhilarates their languid minds, within
The golden mean confin'd. Philips.

EXHILARA'TION. n. s. [from exhilarate.]

1. The act of giving gaiety.

EXICCA'TION. n. s. [from exicate.] Arefaction; act of drying up; state of being dried up.

What is more easily refuted than that old vulgar assertion of an universal drought and exiccation of the earth? As if the sun could evaporate the least drop of its moisture, so that it should never descend again, but be attracted and elevated quite out of the atmosphere. Bentley

EXI'CCATIVE. adj. [from exiccate.] Drying in quality; having the power of drying.

E'XIGENCE. } n. s. [This word is proba-
E'XIGENCY. } bly only a corruption of exigents, vitiated by an unskilful pronunciation.]

1. Demand; want; need.

As men, we are at our own choice, both for time and place and form, according to the exigence of our own occasions in private. Hooker.

You have heard what the present condition and exigencies of these several charities are. Atterbury.

While our fortunes exceed not the measure of real convenience, and are adapted to the exigencies of our station, we perceive the hand of Providence in our gradual and successive supplies. Rogers.

2. Pressing necessity; distress; sudden occasion.

This dissimulation in war may be called stratagem and conduct; in other exigencies address and dexterity. Broome.

Now in such exigencies not to need,
Upon my word you must be rich indeed!
A noble superfluity it craves,
Not for yourself, but for your fools and knaves. Pope.

E'XIGENT. n. s. [exigens, Lat.]

1. Pressing business; occasion that requires immediate help.

In such an exigent I see not how they could have staid to deliberate about any other regiment than that which already was devised to their hands. Hooker, Preface.

The council met, your guards to find you sent,
And know your pleasure in this exigent. Waller.

2. [A law term.] A writ used when the defendant is not to be found, being part of the process leading to an outlawry. Shakespeare uses it for an extremity. Hanmer.

3. End.

These eyes, like lamps whose wasting oil is spent,
Wax dim, as drawing to their exigent. Shakesp.

EXIGU'ITY. n. s. [exiguitas, Lat.] Smallness; diminutiveness; slenderness.

The exiguity and shape of the extant particles is now supposed. Boyle on Colours.

EXI'GUOUS adj. [exiguus, Lat.] Small; diminutive; little. Not used.

Their subtile parts and exiguous dose are consumed and evaporated in less than two hours time. Harvey.

E'XILE. n. s. [exilium, Lat. It seems anciently to have had the accent indifferently on either syllable: now it is uniformly on the first.]

1. Banishment; state of being banished from one's country.

Our state of bodies would bewray what life
We've led since thy exile. Shakesp.

Welcome is exile, welcome were my death. Shakesp.

Let them pronounce the steep Tarpeian death,
Vagabond exile, flaying, pent to linger,
But with a grain of day, I would not buy
Their mercy at the price of one fair word. Shak.

2. The person banished.

O must the wretched exiles ever mourn,
Nor after length of rowling years return? Dryden.

Ulysses, sole of all the victor train,
An exile from his dear paternal coast,
Deplor'd his absent queen, and empire lost. Pope.

EXI'LE. adj. [exilis, Lat.] Small; slender; not full; not powerful. Not in use, except in philosophical writings.

It were good to enquire what means may be to draw forth the exile heat which is in the air; for that may be a secret of great power to produce cold weather. Bacon.

In a virginal, when the lid is down, it maketh a more exile sound than when the lid is open. Bacon.

To E'XILE. v. a. [from the noun. This had formerly the accent on the last syllable, now generally on the first, though Dryden has used both.] To banish; to drive from a country; to transport.

Call home our exil'd friends abroad,
That fled the snares of watchful tyranny. Shak.

Foul subordination is predominant,
And equity exil'd your highness' land. Shakesp.

For that offence,
Immediately we do exile him hence. Shak.

They, fettered with the bonds of a long night,
lay there exiled from the eternal Providence. Wisd. xvii. 2.

His brutal manners from his breast exil'd,
His mein he fashion'd, and his tongue he filed. Dryden.

Arms and the man I sing, who forc'd by fate,
And haughty Juno's unrelenting hate,
Expel'd and exil'd. Dryden.

EXI'LEMENT. n. s. [from exile.] Banishment.

Fitzosborn was discarded into foreign service for a pretty shadow of exilement. Wotton.

EXILI'TION. n. s. [exilitio, Lat.] The act of springing or rushing out suddenly.

From saltpetre proceedeth the force and report of gunpowder; for sulphur and small-coal alone, will not take fire with noise or exilition, and powder, which is made of impure and greasy petre, hath but a weak emission, and gives but a faint report. Brown.

EXI'LITY. n. s. [exilis, Lat.] Slenderness; smallness; diminution.

Certain flies, called ephemera, live but a day; the cause is the exility of the spirit, or perhaps the absence of the sun. Bacon.

For exility of the voice, or other sounds, it is certain that the voice doth pass through solid and hard bodies, if they be not too thick, and through water, which is likewise a very close body, and such an one as letteth not in air. Bacon.

A body, by being subtilized, can lose nothing of its corporeity; neither can it hereby gain any thing but exility; for all degrees of subtility are essentially the same thing. Grew.

EXI'MIOUS. adj. [eximius, Lat.] Famous; eminent; conspicuous; excellent. Dict.

EXINANI'TION. n. s. [exinanitio, Lat.] Privation; loss.

He is not more impotent in his glory than he was in his exinanition. Decay of Piety.

To EXI'ST. v. n. [existo, Lat.] To be; to have a being.

It is as easy to conceive that an Almighty power might produce a thing out of nothing, and make that to exist de novo, which did not exist before; as to conceive the world to have had no beginning, but to have existed from eternity. South.

It seems reasonable to enquire, how such a multitude comes to make but one idea, since that combination does not always exist together in nature. Locke.

One year is past, a different scene!
No farther mention of the dean:
Who now, alas, no more is mist
Than if he never did exist. Swift.

EXI'STENCE. } n. s. [existentia, low Lat.]
EXI'STENCY. } State of being; actual possession of being.

Nor is only the existency of this animal considerable, but many things delivered thereof. Brown.

It is impossible any being can be eternal with successive eternal physical changes, or variety of states or manner of existency, naturally and necessarily concomitant unto it. Hale.

The soul, secur'd in her existence, smiles
At the drawn dagger, and defies its point. Addis.

When a being is considered as possible, it is said to have an essence or nature: such were all things before the creation. When it is considered as actual, then it is said to have existence also. Watts.

EXI'STENT. adj. [from exist.] Having being; in possession of being or of existence.

Whatsoever sign the sun possessed, whose recess or vicinity defineth the quarters of the year, those seasons were actually existent. Brown.

The eyes and minds are fastened on objects which have no real being as if they were truly existent. Brown.

EXISTIMA'TION. n. s. [existimatio, Lat.]

1. Opinion.

2. Esteem.

E'XIT. n. s. [exit, Lat.]

1. The term set in the margin of plays to mark the time at which the player goes off the stage.

2. Recess; departure; act of quitting the stage; act of quitting the theatre of life.

All the world's a stage,
And all the men and women meerly players:
They have their exits and their entrances,
And one man in his time plays many parts. Shak.

A regard for fame becomes a man more towards the exit than at his entrance into life. Swift.

Many of your old comrades live a short life, and make a figure at their exit. Swift.

3. Passage out of any place.

In such a pervious substance as the brain, they might find an easy either entrance or exit, almost every where. Glanville.

4. Way by which there is a passage out.

The fire makes its way, forcing the water forth through its ordinary exits, wells, and the outlets of rivers. Woodward.

EXI'TIAL. } adj. [exitialis, Lat.] De-
EXI'TIOUS. } structive; fatal; mortal; deleterious. Not in use.

Most exitial fevers, although not concomitated with the tokens, exanthemata, anthraces, or carbuncles, are to be censured pestilential. Harvey.

E'XODUS. } n. s. [ἔξοδος.] Departure;
E'XODI. } journey from a place; the second book of Moses is so called, because it describes the journey of the Israelites from Egypt.

In all probability their years continued to be three hundred and sixty-five days, ever since the time of the Jewish exody at least. Hale.

EXO'RBITANCY. } French.]

1. The act of going out of the track prescribed.

2. Enormity; gross deviation from rule or right.

I see some of this fault cleave to those, who have eminently corrected all other exorbitancies of the tongue. Gov. Tongue.

The reverence of my presence may be a curb to your exorbitancies Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

The people were grosly imposed on, to commit such exorbitancies as could not end but in the dissolution of the government. Swift.

3. Boundless depravity.

They riot still,
Unbounded in exorbitance of ill. Garth.

EXO'RBITANT. adj. [ex and orbito, Lat.]

1. Going out of the prescribed track.

2. Deviating from the course appointed or rule established.

What signifies the fiction of the tortoise riding upon the wings of the wind, but to prescribe bounds and measures to our exorbitant passions? L'Estrange.

These phenomena are not peculiar to earthquakes in our times, but have been observed in all ages, and particularly those exorbitant commotions of the waters of the globe. Woodw. Nat. Hist.

3. Anomalous; not comprehended in a settled rule or method.

The Jews, who had laws so particularly determining in all affairs what to do, were notwithstanding continually inured with causes exorbitant, and such as their laws had not provided for. Hooker.

4. Enormous; beyond due proportion; excessive.

Their subjects would live in great plenty, were not the impositions so very exorbitant; for the courts are too splendid for the territories. Addison.

So endless and exorbitant are the desires of men, that they will grasp at all, and can form no scheme of perfect happiness with less. Swift.

To* EXO'RBITATE. v. n. [ex and orbito, Lat.] To deviate; to go out of the track or road prescribed.

The planets sometimes would have approached the sun as near as the orb of mercury, and sometimes have exorbitated beyond the distance of Saturn. Bentley.

To* E'XORCISE. v. a. [ἐξορκίζω.]

1. To adjure by some holy name.

2. To drive away spirits by certain forms of adjuration.

3. To purify from the influence of malignant spirits by religious ceremonies.

And fly'rs, that through the wealthy regions run,
Resort to farmers rich, and bless their halls,
And exorcise the beds, and cross the walls. Dryd.

E'XORCISER. n. s. [from exorcise.] One who practises to drive away evil spirits.

E'XORCISM. n. s. [ἐξορκισμος.] The form of adjuration, or religious ceremony by which evil and malignant spirits are driven away.

Will his lordship behold and hear our exorcisms? Shakesp.

Symptoms supernatural must be only curable by supernatural means, namely, by devout prayers or exorcisms. Harvey.

E'XORCIST. n. s. [ἐξορκιστης.]

1. One who by adjurations, prayers, or religious acts, drives away malignant spirits.

Then certain of the vagabond Jews, exorcists, took upon them to call over them which had evil spirits. Acts, xix. 13.

2. An enchanter; a conjuror. Improperly.

Soul of Rome!
Thou, like an exorcist, had conjur'd up
My mortified spirit. Shakesp. Julius Cæsar.

Is there no exorcist
Beguiles the truer office of mine eyes?
Is't real that I see? Shakesp.

EXORDIUM. n. s. [Lat.] A formal preface; the proemial part of a composition.

Nor will I thee detain
With poets fictions, nor oppress thine ear
With circumstance, and long exordiums here.
May's Virgil.

I have been distasted at this way of writing, by reason of long prefaces and exordiums. Addison.

EXORNA'TION. n. s. [exornatio, Lat.] Ornament; decoration; embellishment.

It seemeth that all those curious exornations should rather cease. Hooker.

Hyperbolical exornations and elegancies many much affect. Hale.

EXO'SSATED. adj. [exossatus, Lat.] Deprived of bones. Dict.

EXOSTO'SIS. n. s. [ἐξ and ὀστεον.] Any protuberance of a bone that is not natural, as often happens in venereal cases. Quincy.

EXO'SSEOUS. adj. [ex and ossa, Lat.] Wanting bones; boneless; formed without bones.

Thus we daily observe in the heads of fishes, as also in snails and soft exosseous animals, nature near the head hath placed a flat white stone, or testaceous concretion. Brown.

EXO'TICK. adj. [ἐξωτικος.] Foreign; not produced in our own country; not domestick.

Some learned men treat of the nature of letters as of some remote exotick thing, whereof we had no knowledge but by fabulous relations. Holder.

Continue fresh hot-beds to entertain such exotick plants as arrive not to their perfection without them. Evelyn's Kalendar

EXO'TICK. n. s. A foreign plant.

Claudian was seated on the other summit, which was barren, and produced, on some spots, plants that are unknown to Italy, and such as the gardeners call exoticks. Addison's Guardian.

To* EXPA'ND. v. a. [expando, Lat.]

1. To spread; to lay open as a net or sheet.

2. To dilate; to spread out every way; to diffuse.

She useth most the target to fence away the blow, and leaves all other weapons to the Alchoran to propagate and expand itself. Howel.

Bellerophon's horse, framed of iron, and placed between two loadstones, with wings expanded, hung pendulous in the air. Brown.

An animal growing, expands its fibres in the air as a fluid. Arbuthnot on Air.

Along the stream of time thy name
Expanded flies, and gathers all its fame. Pope.

EXPA'NSE. n. s. [expansum, Lat.] A body wisely extended without inequalities.

A murmuring sound
Of waters issue from a cave, and spread
Into a liquid plain; then stood unmov'd,
Pure as th' expanse of heav'n. Milton.

Bright as th' ethereal glows the green expanse. Savage.

On the smooth expanse of crystal lakes,
The sinking stone at first a circle makes,
The trembling surface, by the motion stirr'd,
Spreads in a second circle, then a third;
Wide, and more wide, the floating rings advance,
Fill all the wat'ry plain, and to the margin dance. Pope.

EXPANSIBI'LITY. n. s. [from expansible.] Capacity of extension; possibility to be expanded or spread into a wider surface.

With the rotundity common to the atoms of all fluids, there is some difference in bulk, by which the atoms in one fluid are distinguished from those of another; else all fluids would be alike in weight, expansibility, and all other qualities. Grew.

EXPA'NSIBLE. adj. [from expansus, Lat.] Capable to be extended; capable to spread into a wider surface.

Bodies are not expansible in proportion to their weight, or to the quantity of matter to be expanded. Grew.

EXPA'NSION. n. s. [from expand.]

1. The state of being expanded into a wider surface or greater space.

'Tis demonstrated that the condensation and expansion of any portion of the air is always proportional to the weight and pressure incumbent upon it. Bentley.

2. The act of spreading out.

The easy expansion of the wing of a bird, and the lightness, strength, and shape of the feathers, are all fitted for her better flight. Grew.

3. Extent; space to which any thing is extended.

Th capacious mind of man cannot be confined by the limits of the world: it extends its thoughts even beyond the utmost expansion of matter, and make excursions into that incomprehensible inane. Locke.

4. Pure space, as distinct from extension in solid matter.

istance or space, in its simple abstract conception, I call expansion, to distinguish it from extension, which expresses this distance only as it is in the solid parts of matter. Locke.

It would for ever take an useless flight,
Lost in expansion, void and infinite. Blackmore.

EXPA'NSIVE. adj. [from expand.] Having the power to spread into a wider surface, or greater space.

The elastick or expansive faculty of the air, whereby it dilates itself when compressed, hath been made use of in the common weather glasses Ray.

Th' expansive atmosphere is cramp'd with cold. Thomson.

To* EXPA'TIATE. v. n. [expatior, Lat.]

1. To range at large; to rove without any prescribed limits.

Religion contracts the circle of our pleasures, but leaves it wide enough for her votaries to expatiate in. Addison's Spectator.

He looks in heav'n with more than mortal eyes,
Bids his free soul expatiate in the skies;
Amidst her kindred stars familiar roam,
Survey the region, and confess her home. Pope.

Expatiate free o'er all this scene of man;
A mighty maze! but not without a plan. Pope.

With wonder seiz'd, we view the pleasing ground
And walk delighted, and expatiate round. Pope.

2. To enlarge upon in language.

They had a custom of offering the tongues to Mercury, because they believed him the giver of eloquence: Ducier expatiates upon this custom. Broome.

3. To let loose; to allow to range. This sense, which is active, is very improper.

Make choice of a subject, which, being of itself capable of all that colours and the elegance of design can possibly give, shall afterwards afford an ample field of matter wherein to expatiate itself. Dryden.

To* EXPE'CT. v. a. [expecto, Lat.]

1. To have a previous apprehension of either good or evil.

We expected
Immediate dissolution. Milton.

Needs must the serpent now his capital bruise
Expect with mortal pain. Milton.

Good with bad
Expect to hear, supernal grace contending
With sinfulness of man. Milton.

Eve, now expect great tidings. Milton.

2. To wait for; to attend the coming.

The guards,
By me encamp'd on yonder hill, expect
Their motion. Milton.

While, expecting there the queen, he rais'd
His wond'ring eyes, and round the temple gaz'd. Dryden.

To* EXPE'CT. v. n. To wait; to stay.

Elihu had expected till Job had spoken. Job.

EXPE'CTABLE. adj. [from expect.] To be expected; to be hoped or feared.

Occult and spiritual operations are not expectable from ice; for being but water congealed, it can never make good such qualities. Brown.

EXPECTANCE.
EXPE'CTANCY. } n. s. [from expect.]

1. The act or state of expecting; expectation.

Every moment is expectancy
Of more arrivance. Shakesp. Othello.

Satyrs leave your petulance,
Or else rail upon the moon,
Your expectance is too soon;
For before the second cock
Crow, the gates will not unlock. Ben Jonson.

This blessed expectance must be now my theme. Boyle.

But fy, my wand'ring muse, how thou do'st stay!
Expectance calls thee now another way. Milton.

2. Something expected.

There is expectance here from both the sides,
What further you will do. Shakesp.

3. Hope; that of which the expectation is accompanied with pleasure.

Oh, what a noble mind is here o'erthrown!
The expectancy and rose of the fair state. Shakesp.

EXPECTANT. adj. [Fr.] Waiting in expectation.

Her majesty has offered concessions, in order to remove scruples raised in the mind of the expectant heir. Swift

EXPE'CTANT. n. s. [from expect.] One who waits in expectation of any thing; one held in dependence by his hopes.

They, vain expectants of the bridal hour,
My stores in riotous expence devour. Pope.

This treatise was agreeable to the whole nation, except those who had employments, or were expectants. Swift to Pope.

EXPECTA'TION. n. s. [expectatio, Lat.]

1. The act of expecting.

The trees
Should have borne men, and expectation fainted,
Longing for what it had not. Shakesp.

The rest,
That are within the note of expectation,
Already are i' th' court. Shakesp.

'Tis expectation makes a blessing dear. Cong

2. The state of expecting either with hope or fear.

Live in a constant and serious expectation of that day, when we must appear before the Judge of heaven and earth. Rogers's Sermons.

3. Prospect of any thing good to come.

My soul, wait thou only upon God, for my expectation is from him. Ps. xlii. 5.

4. The object of happy expectation; the Messiah expected.

Now clear I understand,
What oft my steadiest thoughts have search'd in vain,
Why our great expectation should be call'd
The Seed of woman. Milton's Par. Lost.

5. A state in which something excellent is expected from us.

How fit it will be for you, born so great a prince, and of so rare not only expectation but proof, to divert your thoughts from the way of goodness. Sidney

You first came home
From travel with such hopes as made you look'd on,
By all men's eyes, a youth of expectation;
Pleas'd with your growing virtue I receiv'd you. Otway.

EXPE'CTER. n. s. [from expect.]

1. One who has hopes of something.

These are not great expecters under your administration, according to the period of governors here. Swift.

2. One who waits for another.

Signify this loving interview
To the expecters of our Trojan part. Shakesp.

To* EXPE'CTORATE. v. a. [ex and pectus, Lat.] To eject from the breast.

Excrementitious humours are expectorated by a cough after a cold or an asthma. Harvey.

Morbifick matter is either attenuated so as to be returned into the channels, or expectorated by coughing. Arbuthnot.

EXPECTORA'TION. n. s. [from expectorate.]

1. The act of discharging from the breast.

2. That discharge which is made by coughing, as bringing up phlegm, or any thing that obstructs the vessels of the lungs, and straitens the breath.

With water, vinegar and honey, in pleurisies and inflammations of the lungs, he mixeth spices, for promoting expectoration. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

EXPE'CTORATIVE. adj. [from expectorate.] Having the quality of promoting expectoration.

Syrups and other expectoratives, in coughs must necessarily occasion a greater cough. Harvey.

EXPE'DIENCE.
EXPE'DIENCY. } n. s. [from expedient.]

1. Fitness; propriety; suitableness to an end.

Solemn dedications of things set apart for Divine Worship, could never have been universally practised, had not right reason dictated the high expediency and great use of such practices. South.

2. It is used in Shakespeare for expedition; adventure; or attempt.

Let me hear
What yesternight our council did decree,
In forwarding this dear expedience. Shakesp.

3. It is also used by Shakespeare for expedition; haste; dispatch.

I shall break
The cause of our expedience to the queen,
And get her leave to part. Shakesp.

Eight tall ships, three thousand men of war,
Are making hither with all due expedience.
Shakesp. Rich. II.

EXPE'DIENT. adj. [expedit, Lat.]

1. Proper; fit; convenient; suitable.

All things are not expedient: in things indifferent there is a choice; they are not always equally expedient. Hooker.

When men live as if there were no God, it becomes expedient for them that there should be none; and then they endeavour to persuade themselves so. Tillotson.

2. In Shakespeare, quick; expeditious.

The adverse winds
Whose leisure I have staid, have given him time
To land his legions all as soon as I:
His marches are expedient to this town. Shak.

EXPE'DIENT. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. That which helps forward, as means to an end.

God does not project for our sorrow, but our innocence; and would never have invited us to the one, but as an expedient to the other. Decay of Piety.

2. A shift; means to an end which are contrived in an exigence, or difficulty.

Th' expedient pleas'd, where neither lost his right;
Mars had the day, and Venus had the night. Dryd.

He flies to a new expedient to solve the matter, and supposes an earth of a make and frame like that of Des Cartes. Woodward.

EXPE'DIENTLY. adj. [from expedient.]

1. Fitly; suitably; conveniently.

2. Hastily; quickly. Not used.

Let my officers of such a nature
Make an extent upon his house and lands:

By sin and death a broad way now is pav'd,
To expedite your glorious march. Milton.

2. To hasten; to quicken.

An inquisition would still be a further improvement, and would expedite the conversion of the Papists. Swift.

3. To dispatch; to issue from a publick office.

Though such charters be expedited of course, and as of right, yet they are varied by discretion. Bacon.

E'XPEDITE. adj. [expeditus, Lat.]

1. Quick; hasty; soon performed.

Wholesome advice, and expedite execution in freeing the state of those monsters. Sandys.

2. Easy; disencumbered; clear from impediments.

Nature can teach the church but in part; neither so fully as is requisite for man's salvation, nor so easily as to make the way plain and expedite enough, that many come to the knowledge of it, and so be saved, and therefore the Scripture has been given. Hooker.

3. Nimble; active; agile.

The more any man's soul is cleansed from sensual lusts, the more nimble and expedite it will be in its operations. Tillotson.

4. It seems to be used by Bacon for light armed in the Roman signification.

He sent the lord chamberlain with expedite forces to speed to Exeter, to the rescue of the town. Bacon's Henry VII.

EX'PEDITELY. adj. [from expedite.] With quickness, readiness, haste.

Nature left his ears naked, that he may turn them more expeditely for the reception of sounds from every quarter. Grew.

EXPEDI'TION. n. s. [from expedite.]

1. Haste; speed; activity.

Prayers, whereunto devout minds have added a piercing kind of brevity, thereby the better to express that quick and speedy expedition wherewith ardent affections, the very wings of prayer, are delighted to present our suits in heaven. Hooker.

Ev'n with the speediest expedition
I will dispatch him to the emperor's court. Shak.

2. A march or voyage with martial intentions.

Young Octavius, and Mark Ant'ony,
Come down upon us with a mighty power,
Bending their expedition tow'rd Philippi. Shakesp.

To* EXPE'L. v. a. [expello, Lat.]

1. To drive out; to force away.

The Lord your God shall expel them from before you, and drive them from out of your sight. Jos. xxiii. 5.

I may know the let why gentle peace
Should not expel these inconveniences. Shakesp.

Suppose a mighty rock to fall there, it would expel the waters out of their places with such violence as to fling them among the clouds. Burnet.

2. To eject; to throw out.

Whatsoever cannot be digested by the stomach, is either put up by vomit, or put down to the guts, and other parts of the body are moved to expel by consent. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

The virgin huntress was not slow
T' expel the shaft from her contracted bow. Dryd.

3. To banish; to drive from the place of residence.

Arms and the man I sing, who forc'd by fate,
And haughty Juno's unrelenting hate,

4. To reject; to refuse.

And would you not poor fellowship expel,
Myself would offer you t' accompany
In this adventurous chanceful jeopardy. Hubberd.

5. To keep off; to exclude; to keep out.

Since she did neglect her looking-glass,
And threw her sun expelling mask away,
The air hath starv'd the roses in her cheeks,
And pitch'd the lily tincture of her face. Shakesp.

Oh that that earth which kept the world in awe
Would patch a wall, expel the winter's flaw! Shakesp.

EXPE'LLER. n. s. [from expel.] One that expels or drives away.

To* EXPE'ND. v. a. [expendo, La.] To lay out; to spend.

Their highways, for their extent, solidity or expensiveness, are some of the greatest monuments of the grandeur of the Roman empire. Arbuthnot.

EXPERIENCE. n. s. [experientia, Lat.]

1. Practice; frequent trial.

Hereof experience hath informed reason, and time hath made those things apparent which were hidden. Raleigh.

But apt the mind or fancy is to rove
Uncheck'd, and of her roving is no end,
'Till warn'd, or by experience taught, she learn,
That not to know at large of things remote
From use, obscure and subtle, but to know
That which before us lies in daily life,
Is the prime wisdom; what is more, is fume
Or emptiness, or fond impertinence,
And renders us in things that most concern
Unpractis'd, unprepar'd, and still to seek. Milton.

2. Knowledge gained by trial and practice.

Boys immature in knowledge
Pawn their experience to their present pleasure. Shakesp.

But if you'll prosper, mark what I advise,
Whom age and long experience render wise. Pope.

He through the armed files
Darts his experienc'd eye. Milton.

EXPE'RIENCED. participial adj. [from experience.]

1. Made skilful by experience.

We must perfect, as much as we can, our ideas of the distinct species; or learn them from such as are used to that sort of things, and are experienced in them. Locke.

2. Wise by long practice.

To him experienc'd Nestor thus rejoin'd,
O friend! what sorrows do'st thou bring to mind! Pope.

EXPE'RIENCER. n. s. One who makes trials; a practiser of experiments.

A curious experiencer did affirm, that the likeness of any object, if strongly enlightened, will appear to another, in the eye of him that looks strongly and steadily upon it, 'till he be dazzled by it; even after he shall have turned his eyes from it. Digby.

EXPE'RIMENT. n. s. [experimentum, Lat.] Trial of any thing; something done in order to discover an uncertain or unknown effect.

That which sheweth them to be wise, is the gathering of principles out of their own particular experiments, and the framing of our particular experiments, according to the rule of their principles, shall make us such as they are. Hooker.

It is good also not to try experiments in states, except the necessity be urgent, or the utility evident Bacon.

Adam! by sad experiment I know,
How little weight with thee my words can find. Milton.

'Till his fall man's mind was ignorant of nothing but of sin; or, at least, it rested in the notion without the smart of the experiment. South's Sermons.

When we are searching out the nature or properties of any being by various methods of trial, this sort of observation is called experiment. Watts.

To* EXPE'RIMENT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To try; to search out by trial.

Francisco Redi experimented that no putrified flesh will of itself, if all insects be carefully kept from it, produce any. Ray on the Creation.

2. To know by experience.

When the succession of ideas ceases, our perception of duration ceases with it, which every one experiments whilst he sleeps soundly. Locke.

EXPERIME'NTAL. adj. [from experiment.]

Trust not my reading, nor my observations,
Which with experimental seal do warrant,
The tenor of my book. Shakesp.

The experimental testimony of Gillius is most considerable of any, who beheld the course thereof. Brown's Vulg. Err.

3. Known by experiment or trial.

We have no other evidence of universal impenetrability, besides a large experience, without an experimental exception. Newton.

These are [illegible] to attempts in their [illegible] that they [illegible] universal design. Bentley's Sermons.

EXPERIMENTALLY. adv. [from experimental.] By experience; by trial; by experiment; by observation.

The miscarriage being sometimes universal, has made us impart what we have experimentally learned by our own observations. Evelyn's Kalendar.

While the man is under the scourge of affliction, he is willing to abjure those sins which he now experimentally finds attended with such bitter consequences. Rogers's Sermons.

EXPE'RIMENTER. n. s. [from experiment.] One who makes experiments.

Galileus and Mersennus, two exact experimenters do think they find this verity by their experiences, but surely this is impossible to be done. Digby.

EXPERT. adj. [expertus, Lat.]

1. Skilful; addressful; intelligent.

Now we will take some order in the town,
Placing therein some expert officers. Shakesp.

Again fair Alma sits confest,
On Florimel's experter breast;
When she the rising sigh constrains,
And by concealing speaks her pains. Prior.

2. Ready; dexterous.

The meanest sculptor in th' Æmilian square,
Can imitate in brass the nail, and hair;
Expert in trifles, and a cunning fool,
Able t' express the parts, but not dispose the whole. Dryden.

They have not the good luck to be perfectly knowing in the forms of syllogism, or expert in mode and figure. Locke.

3. Skilful by practice or experience. This sense is rare.

Expert men can execute, and judge of particulars, one by one; but the general counsels, and the plots and marshalling of affairs, come best from those that are learned. Bacon.

4. It is used by Pope with of before the object of skill, generally with in.

Thy offspring bloom,
Expert of arms, and prudent in debate,
The gifts of Heaven to guard thy hoary state.
Pope's Odyssey.

EXPE'RTLY. adv. [from expert.] In a skilful, ready, and dextrous manner.

EXPE'RTNESS. n. s. [from expert.] Skill; readiness; dexterity.

To EXPIATE. v. a. [expio, Lat.]

1. To annul the guilt of a crime by subsequent acts of piety; to atone for.

Strong and able petty felons, in true penitence, implore permission to expiate their crimes by their assiduous labours in so innocent and so hopeful a work. Bacon's Physical Remains.

The odium which some men's rigour or remissness had contracted upon my government, I resolved to expiate by regulations. King Charles.

For the cure of this disease an humble, serious, hearty repentance is the only physick; not to expiate the guilt of it, but to qualify us to partake of the benefit of Christ's atonement. Ray.

2. To avert the threats of prodigies.

3. To make reparation for.

The treasurer obliged himself to expiate the injury, to procure some declaration to that purpose, under his majesty's sign manual. Clarendon.

The more they have hitherto embezzled their parts, the more they endeavour to expiate that unthriftiness by a more careful managery for the future. Government of the Tongue.

EXPIA'TION. n. s. [from expiate.]

1. The act of expiating or atoning for any crime.

2. The means by which we atone for crimes; atonement.

Law can discover sin, but not remove,
Save by those shadowy expiations weak,
The blood of bulls and goats. Milton.

The former part of this poem is but a due expiation for my not serving my king and country in it. Dryden.

Let a man's innocence be what it will, let his virtues rise to the highest pitch of perfection, there will be still in him so many secret sins, so many human frailties, so many offences of ignorance, passion, and prejudice, so many unguarded words and thoughts, that without the advantage of such an expiation and atonement, as Christianity has revealed to us, it is impossible he should be saved. Addison.

3. Practices by which the threats of ominous prodigies were averted.

Upon the birth of such monsters, the Grecians and Romans did use divers sorts of expiations, and to go about their principal cities with many solemn ceremonies and sacrifices. Hayward.

E'XPIATORY. adj. [from expiate.] Having the power of expiation or atonement.

EXPIRA'TION. n. s. [from expire.]

1. That act of respiration which thrusts the air out of the lungs, and contracts the cavity of the breast. Quincy.

In all expiration the motion is outwards, and therefore rather driveth away the voice than draweth it. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Of an inflammation of the diaphragm, the symptoms are a violent fever, and a most exquisite pain increases upon inspiration; by which it is distinguished from a pleurisy, in which the greatest pain is in expiration. Arbuthnot on Diet.

2. The last emission of breath; death.

We have heard him breathe the groan of expiration. Rambler.

3. Evaporation; act of fuming out.

4. Vapour; matter expired.

Words of this sort resemble the wind in fury and impetuousness, in transientness and sudden expiration. Decay of Piety.

Close air is warmer than open air, as the cause of cold is an expiration from the earth, which in open places is stronger. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

5. The cessation of any thing to which life is figuratively ascribed.

To satisfy ourselves of its expiration we darkened the room, and in vain endeavoured to discover any spark of fire. Boyle.

6. The conclusion of any limited time.

If 'till the expiration of your month,
You will return and sojourn with my sister,
Dismissing half your train, come then to me
Shakesp. King Lear.

This he did in a fortnight after the expiration of the treaty of Uxbridge. Clarendon.

To EXPI'RE. v. a. [expiro, Lat.]

1. To breathe out.

To save his body from the scorching fire,
Which he from hellish entrails did expire.
Fairy Queen.

Anatomy exhibits the lungs in a continual motion of inspiring and expiring air. Harvey.

This chaff'd the boar; his nostrils flames expire,
And his red eyeballs roll with living fire.
Dryden.

2. To exhale; to send out in exhalations.

The fluid which is thus secreted, and expired forth along with the air, goes off in insensible parcels. Woodward.

3. To close; to conclude; to bring to an end. Obsolete.

When as time flying with wings swift,
Expired had the term that these two javels
Should render up a reck'ning of their travels.
Hubb. Tale.

1. To make an emission of the breath.

If the inspiring and expiring organ of any animal be stopt, it suddenly dies. Walton's Angler.

2. To die; to breathe the last.

For when the fair in all their pride expire,
To their first elements the souls retire. Pope.

3. To perish; to fall; to be destroyed.

All thy praise is vain,
Save what this verse, which never shall expire,
Shall to thee purchase. Spenser.

The dead man's knell
Is there scarce ask'd, for whom; and good mens lives
Expire before the flowers in their caps,
Dying or ere they sicken. Shakesp.

4. To fly out with a blast.

The distance judg'd for shot of every size,
The linstocks touch, the ponderous ball expires;
The vigorous seaman every porthole plies,
And adds his heart to every gun he fires.
Dryden.

5. To conclude; to terminate; to come to an end.

A month before
This bond expires, I do expect return
Of thrice three times the value of this bond.
Shakesp.

To EXPLA'IN. v. a. [explano, Lat.] To expound; to illustrate; to clear by notes or commentaries.

Such is the original design, however we may explain it away. Ayliffe's Parergon.

You will have variety of commentators to explain the difficult passages to you. Gay.

Some explained the meaning quite away.
Pope.

EXPLAI'NABLE. adj. [from explain.] Capable of being explained or interpreted.

It is symbolically explainable, and implieth purification and cleanness.
Brown's Vulgar Errours.

EXPLANA'TION. n. s. [from explain.]

1. The act of explaining or interpreting.

2. The sense given by an explainer or interpreter.

Before this explanation be condemned, and the bill found upon it, some lawyers should fully inform the jury. Swift.

EXPLA'NATORY. adj. [from explain.] Containing explanation.

Had the printer given me notice, I would have printed the names, and writ explanatory notes.
Swift.

EXPLETIVE. n. s. [expletivum, Lat.] Something used only to take up room; something of which the use is only to prevent a vacancy.

These are not only useful expletives to matter, but great ornaments of style Swift.

Oft the ear the open vowels tire,
While expletives their feeble aid do join. Pope.

Expletives, whether words or syllables, are made use of purely to supply a vacancy, do, before verbs plural, is absolutely such, and future refiners may explode did and does. Pope.

E'XPLICABLE. adj. [from explicate.] Explainable; possible to be explained.

Many difficulties, scarce explicable with any certainty, occur in the fabric of human nature. Hale.

Great variety there is in compound bodies, and little many of them seem to be explicable. Boyle.

To EXPLICATE. v. a. [explico, Lat.]

1. To unfold; to expand.

They explicate the leaves, and ripen food
For the silk labourers of the mulberry wood. Blackmore.

2. To explain; to clear; to interpret.

They do not understand that part of Christian philosophy which explicates the secret nature of this divine sacrament. Taylor.

Although the truths may be elicited and explicated by the contemplation of animals, yet they are more clearly evidenced in the contemplation of man. Hale's Origin of Mankind

The last verse of his last satyr is not yet sufficiently explicated. Dryden.

EXPLICA'TION. n. s. [from explicate.]

1. The act of opening; unfolding or expanding.

2. The act of explaining; interpretation; explanation.

The church preacheth, first publishing by way of testimony, the truth which from them she hath received, written in the sacred volumes of Scripture; secondly, by way of explication, discovering the mysteries which lie hid therein. Hooker.

Many things are needful for explication, and many for application unto particular occasions. Hooker.

Allowances are made in the explication of our Saviour's parables, which hold only as to the main scope. Atterbury.

3. The sense given by an explainer; interpretation.

'Tis the substance of this theory I mainly depend upon: many single explications and particularities may be rectified upon farther thoughts. Burnet.

E'XPLICATIVE. adj. [from explicate.] Having a tendency to explain.

If the term which is added to the subject of a complex proposition be either essential or any way necessary to it, then it is called explicative; for it only explains the subject; as, every mortal man is a son of Adam. Watts's Logick.

EXPLICA'TOR. n. s. [from explicate.] Expounder; interpreter; explainer.

EXPLI'CIT. adj. [explicitus, Lat.] Unfolded; plain; clear; not obscure; not merely implied.

We must lay aside that lazy and fallacious method of censuring by the lump, and bring things close to explicit proof and evidence. Burnet.

These speculations, when most refined, serve only to shew how impossible it is for us to have a clear and explicit notion of that which is infinite. South's Sermons.

EXPLI'CITLY. adv. [from explicit.] Plainly; directly; not merely by inference or implication.

This querulous humour carries an implicit repugnance to God's disposals; but where it is indulged, it usually is its own expositor, and explicitly avows it. Government of the Tongue.

To EXPLO'DE. v. a. [explodo, Lat.]

1. To drive out disgracefully with some noise of contempt; to treat with open contempt; to treat not only with neglect, but open disdain or scorn.

Him old and young
Exploded, and hath seiz'd with violent hands,
Had not a cloud descending snatch'd him thence Unseen amid' the throng. Milton's Parad. Lost.

Thus was the applause they meant
Turn'd to exploding hiss, triumph to shame,
Cast on themselves from their own mouths. Milton.

Old age explodes all but morality. Roscommon.

There is pretended, that a magnetical globe or terrella, being placed upon its poles, would have a constant rotation; but this is commonly exploded, as being against all experience. Wilkins.

Shall that man pass for a proficient in Christ's school, who would have been exploded in the school of Zeno? South.

Provided that no word, which a society shall give a sanction to, be antiquated and exploded, they may receive whatever new ones they shall find occasion for. Swift.

2. To drive out with noise and violence.

But late the kindled powder did explode
The massy ball, and the brass tube unload. Blackmore.

EXPLO'DER. n. s. [from explode.] An hisser; one who drives out any person or thing with open contempt.

EXPLO'IT. n. s. [expletum, Lat. res expleta.] A design accomplished; an atchievement; a successful attempt.

Know'st thou not any whom corrupting gold
Would tempt into a close exploit of death? Shakesp.

Flight cannot stain the honour you have won;
But mine it will that no exploit have done. Shakesp.

How shall I relate
To human sense th' invisible exploits
Of warring spirits? Milton's Parad. Lost.

He breaks fierce Hannibal's insulting heats;
Of which exploit thus our friend Ennius treats. Denham.

Will you thus dishonour
Your past exploits, and sully all your wars! Addison.

To EXPLO'IT. v. a. [from the noun.] To perform; to atchieve. Not used.

He exploited great matters in his own person in Gallia, and by his son in Spain. Camden.

To EXPLO'RATE. v. a. [exploro, Lat.] To search out; to try by searching; to explore.

Snails exclude their horns, and therewith explorate their way. Brown's Vulg. Err.

EXPLORA'TION. n. s. [from explorate.] Search; examination.

For exact exploration scales should be suspended where the air is quiet, that, clear of impediments, they may the more freely convert upon their natural verticity. Brown's Vulg. Err.

Use may be made of the like way of exploration in that enquiry which puzzles so many modern naturalists. Boyle.

EXPLORA'TOR. n. s. [from explorate.] One who searches; a searcher; an examiner.

EXPLO'RATORY. adj. [from explorate.] Searching; examining.

To EXPLO'RE. v. a. [exploro, Lat.] To try; to search into; to examine by trial.

Abdiel that sight endur'd not, where he stood
Among the mightiest, bent on highest deeds,
And thus his own undaunted heart explores. Milton.

Divers opinions I have been inclined to question not only as a naturalist, but as a chymist, whether they be agreeable to true grounds of philosophy, or the exploring experiments of the fire. Boyle.

But Capys, and the rest of sounder mind,
The fatal present to the flames design'd,
Or to the wat'ry deep; at least to bore
The hollow sides, and hidden frauds explore.
Dryden's Æneid.

The mighty Stagyrite first left the shore,
Spread all his sails, and durst the deeps explore;
He steer'd securely, and discover'd far,
Led by the light of the Maonian star. Pope

EXPLO'REMENT. n. s. [from explore.] Search; trial.

The frustrated search of Porta, upon the exploration of many, could scarce find one. Brown.

EXPLO'SION. n. s. [from explode.] The act of driving out any thing with noise and violence.

Those parts which abound with strata of stone, or marble, making the strongest opposition, are the most furiously shattered; an event observable not only in this, but all other explosions whatever. Woodward.

In gunpowder the charcoal and sulphur easily take fire, and set fire to the nitre; and the spirit of the nitre being thereby rarified into vapour, rushes out with explosion, after the manner that the vapour of water rushes out of an eolipile: the sulphur also, being volatile, is converted into vapour, and augments the explosion. Newton's Opticks.

With explosion vast,
The thunder raises his tremendous voice. Thomson.

EXPLO'SIVE. adj. [from explode.] Driving out with noise and violence.

These minerals constitute in the earth a kind of natural gunpowder, which takes fire; and by the assistance of its explosive power, renders the shock greater. Woodward.

EXPO'NENT. n. s. [from expono, Lat.]

Exponent of the ratio, or proportion between any two numbers or quantities, is the exponent arising when the antecedent is divided by the consequent: thus six is the exponent of the ratio which thirty hath to five. Also a rank of numbers in arithmetical progression, beginning from 0, and placed over a rank of numbers in geometrical progression, are called indices or exponents: and in this is founded the reason and demonstration of logarithms: for addition and subtraction of these exponents answers to multiplication and division in the geometrical numbers. Harris.

EXPONE'NTIAL. adj. [from exponent.]

Exponential curves are such as partake both of the nature of algebraick and transcendental ones. They partake of the former, because they consist of a finite number of terms, though those terms themselves are indeterminate; and they are in some measure transcendental, because they cannot be algebraically constructed. Harris.

To EXPO'RT. v. a. [exporto, Lat.] To carry out of a country, generally in the way of traffick.

Glorious followers taint business for want of secrecy, and export honour from a man, and make him a return in envy. Bacon.

Edward III. by his encouragement of trade, turned the scale so much in favour of English merchandise, that, by a balance of trade taken in his time, the exported commodities amounted to two hundred ninety-four thousand pounds, and the imported but to thirty-eight thousand. Addison's Freeholder.

Great ships brought from the Indies precious wood, and exported pearls and robes. Arbuthnot.

E'XPORT. n. s. [from the verb.] Commodity carried out in traffick.

EXPO'RTATION. n. s. [from export.] The act or practice of carrying out commodities into other countries.

The cause of a kingdom's thriving is fruitfulness of soil to produce necessaries, not only sufficient for the inhabitants, but for exportation into other countries. Swift.

EXPO'RTER. n. s. [from export.] He that carries out commodities, in opposition to the importer, who brings them in.

Money will be melted down or carried away in coin by the exporter, whether the pieces of each species be by the law bigger or less. Locke.

To EXPO'SE. v. a. [expono, expositum, Lat. exposer, Fr.]

1. To lay open; to make liable.

Take physick, Pomp;
Expose thyself to feel what wretches feel,
That thou may'st shake the superflux to them,
And shew Heaven just. Shakesp. King Lear.

Who here
Will envy whom the highest place exposes
Foremost to stand against the Thunder's aim? Milton.

To pass the riper period of his age,
Acting his part upon a crowded stage,
To lasting toils expos'd, and endless cares,
To open dangers, and to secret snares. Prior.

2. To put in the power of any thing.

But still he held his purpose to depart;
For as he lov'd her equal to his life,
He would not to the seas expose his wife. Dryden.

3. To lay open; to make bare; to put in a state of being acted upon.

Then joyous birds frequent the lonely grove,
And beasts, by nature strong, renew their love;
Then fields the blades of bury'd corn disclose,
And while the balmy western spirit blows,
Earth to the breath her bosom dares expose. Dryden.

4. To lay open to censure or ridicule; to shew in such a state as brings contempt.

Like Horace, you only expose the follies of men, without arraigning the r vices. Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.

Tully has justly exposed a precept, that a man should live with his friend in such a manner that if he became his enemy, it should not be in his power to hurt him Addison's Spectator.

A fool might once himself alone expose,
Now one in verse makes many more in prose. Pope.

Your fame and your property suffer alike, you are at once exposed and plundered. Pope.

5. To lay open to examination.

Those who seek truth only, freely expose their principles to the test, and are pleased to have them examined. Locke.

6. To put in danger.

The exposing himself notoriously did change the fortune of the day, when his troops begun to give ground. Clarendon.

7. To cast out to chance.

A father, unnaturally careless of his child, gives him to another man, and he again exposes him: a third man finding him, breeds up and provides for him as his own. Locke.

Helpless and naked on a woman's knees,
To be expos'd or rear'd as she may please,
Feel her neglect, and pine for her disease. Prior.

8. To censure; to treat with dispraise. A colloquial abuse of the word.

A little wit is equally capable of exposing a beauty, and of aggravating a fault. Addison's Spectator.

EXPOSI'TION. n. s. [from expose.]

1. The situation in which any thing is placed with respect to the sun or air.

Water he chuses clear, light, without taste or smell; drawn from springs with an easterly exposition. Arbuthnot.

The diversity of exposition of the several kitchens in this city, whereby some receive the rays of the sun sooner, and others later, will occasion great irregularity as to the time of dining. Arbuthnot.

2. Explanation; interpretation; [from expound, expono, Lat.]

My lord of York, it better shew'd with you,
When that your flock, assembled by the bell,
Encircled you, to hear with reverence
Your exposition on the holy text. Shakesp. Henry IV.

You are a worthy judge;
You know the law: your exposition
Hath been most sound. Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

I have sometimes very boldly made such expositions of my authors, as no commentator will forgive me. Dryden.

EXPO'SITOR. n. s. expositor, Lat.] Explainer; expounder; interpreter.

A mirth-moving jest,
Which his fair tongue, conceit's expositor,
Delivers in such apt and gracious words,
That aged ears play truant at his tales. Shakesp.

In the picture of Abraham's sacrificing his son, Isaac is described as a little boy, which is not consentaneous unto the authority of expositors. Brown.

The sinner's conscience is the best expositor of the mind of God, under any judgment or affliction. South's Sermons.

Schoolasts, those copious expositors of places, pour out a vain overflow of learning on passages plain and easy. Locke.

More than thy deeds: 'tis only judgment waits thee. Ben Jonson.

Art did express
A quintessence even from nothingness,
From dull privatives and lean emptiness. Donne.

EXPRE'SS. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Copied; resembling; exactly like.

Of his presence many a sign
Still following thee, still compassing thee round
With goodness and paternal love; his face
Express, and of his steps the track divine. Milton.

2. Plain; apparent; declared in direct terms.

There hath been some doubt whether containing in Scripture do import express setting down in plain terms; or else comprehending in such sort, that by reason we may from thence conclude all things which are necessary. Hooker.

There is not any positive law of men, whether general or particular, received by formal express consent, as in councils; or by secret approbation; but the same may be taken away, if occasion serves. Hooker.

All the gazers on the skies,
Read not in fair heaven's story
Expresser truth, or truer glory,
Than they might in her bright eyes. B. Jonson.

3. Clear; not dubious. This seems to be no proper use.

I love to feel myself of an express and settled judgment and affection in things of the greatest moment, More's Div. Dial.

As to the testimonies of the fathers, let them be never so express against all sorts of prayers and invocations, they hold only of such a sort of prayer. Stilling fleet.

Where reason or scripture is express for any opinion, or action, we may receive it as of divine authority. Locke.

4. On purpose; for a particular end.

They who are not induced to believe and live as they ought, by those discoveries which God hath made in Scripture, would stand out against any evidence whatsoever; even that of a messenger sent express from the other world. Atterbury.

EXPRE'SS. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. A messenger sent on purpose.

The king sent an express immediately to the marquis, with all the particular informations. Clarendon.

EXPRE'SSURE. n. s. [from express. Now disused.]

1. Expression; utterance. Not used.

There is a mystery in the soul of state,
Which hath an operation more divine,
Than breath or pen can give expressure too. Shak.

2. The form; the likeness represented. Not used.

I will drop some obscure epistles of love, wherein, by the colour of his beard, the manner of his gait, the expressure of his eye, forehead, and complexion, he shall find himself personated. Shakesp.

3. The mark; the impression. Not used.

And nightly, meadow-fairies, look you sing,
Like to the garter-compass in a ring:
Th' expressure that he leaves, green let it be,
More fertile fresh than all the field to see. Shak.

To EXPROBRATE. v. a. [exprobo, Lat.] To charge upon with reproach; to impute only with blame; to upbraid.

To exprobrate their stupidity, he induces the providence of works; now, if the bird had been unknown, the illustration had been obscure, and the exprobration not so proper. Brown.

EXPROBRA'TION. n. s. [from exprobrate.] Scornful charge; reproachful accusation; act of upbraiding.

The goodness we glory in, is to find out somewhat whereby we may judge others to be ungodly: each other's fault we observe as matter of exprobration, not of grief. Hooker.

The Parthians, with exprobration of Crassus's thirst after money, poured gold into his mouth after he was dead. Abbot.

It will be a denial with scorn, with a taunting exprobration; and to be miserable without commiseration, is the height of misery. South's Sermons.

No need such boasts, or exprobrations false
Of cowardice: the military mound
The British files transcend in evil hour
For their proud foes. Philips.

To EXPRO'PRIATE. v. a. [ex and proprius, Lat.] To make no longer our own; to hold no longer as a property. Not in use.

When you have resigned, or rather consigned, your expropriated will to God, and thereby entrusted him to will for you, all his dispensations towards you are, in effect, the acts of your own will. Boyle's Seraphick Love.

To EXPU'GN. v. a. [expugno, Lat.] To conquer; to take by assault.

EXPUGNA'TION. n. s. [from expugn.] Conquest; the act of taking by assault.

EXQUI'SITELY. adv. [from exquisite.] Perfectly; completely: in either a good or ill sense.

We see more exquisitely with one eye shut than with both open; for that the spirits visual unite themselves, and become stronger. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

A collection of rare manuscripts, exquisitely written in Arabick, and sought in the most remote parts by Epenius, the most excellent linguist. Wotton.

The soldier then, in Grecian arts unskill'd,
Returning rich with plunder from the field,
If cups of silver or of gold be brought,
With jewels set, and exquisitely wrought,
To glorious trappings strait the plate he turn'd,
And with the glitt'ring spoil his horse adorn'd.
Dryden.

The poetry of operas is generally as exquisitely ill as the music is good. Addison on Italy.

E'XQUISITENESS. n. s. [from exquisite.] Nicety; perfection.

We suppose the superficies of the two glasses should be so exactly flat and smooth, that no air at all can come between them; and experience has informed us, that is extremely difficult to procure from our ordinary tradesmen either glasses or marbles so much as approaching such an exquisiteness. Boyle.

E'XSCRIPT. n. s. [exscriptum, Lat.] A copy; a writing copied from another.

EXSI'CCANT. adj. [from exsiccate.] Drying; having the power to dry up.

Some are moderately moist, and require to be treated with medicines of the like nature, such as fleshy parts; others dry in themselves, yet require exsiccants, as bones. Wiseman.

To* EXSI'CCATE. v. a. [exsicco, Lat.] To dry.

If in a dissolution of steel a separation of parts be made by precipitation, or exhalation, the exsiccated powder ascends not unto the loadstone. Brown.

EXTRA'VASATED. adj. [extra and vasa, Lat.] Forced out of the properly containing vessels.

The viscous matter, which lies like leather upon the extravasated blood of pleuretick people, may be dissolved by a due degree of heat. Arbuthnot on Aliment.

EXTRAVASA'TION. n. s. [from extravasated.] The act of forcing, or state of being forced out of the proper containing vessels.

Aliment, too viscous, obstructing the glands and by its acrimony corroding the small vessels of the lungs, after a rupture and extravasation of blood, easily produces an ulcer. Arbuthnot.

EXTRAVE'NATE. adj. [extra and vena, Lat.] Let out of the veins.

That there is a magnetick way of curing wounds, by anointing the weapon; and that the wound is affected in like manner as is the extravenate blood by the sympathetick medicine as to matter of fact, is with circumstances of good evidence asserted. Glanville's Scepsis.

EXTRAVE'RSION. n. s. [extra and versio, Lat.] The act of throwing out; the state of being thrown out.

Nor does there intervene heat to afford them any colour to pretend that there is made an extraversion of the sulphur, or of any of the two other supposed principles. Boyle.

EXTRA'UGHT. part. [This is an obsolete participle from extract; as distraught from distract.] Extracted.

Sham'st thou not, knowing whence thou art extraught,
To let thy tongue detect thy baseborn heart? Shak.

EXTRE'ME. adj. [extremus, Lat.] This word is sometimes corrupted by the superlative termination, of which it is by no means capable, as it has in itself the superlative signification.]

1. Greatest; of the highest degree.

The Lord shall smite thee with a fever, an inflammation, and an extreme burning. Deut. xxviii. 22.

They thought it the extremest of evils to put themselves at the mercy of those hungry and disorderly people. Bacon.

2. Utmost.

The hairy fool
Stood on th' extremest verge of the swift brook,
Augmenting it with tears. Shakesp. As you like it.

Miseno's cape and Bauli last he view'd,
That on the sea's extremest borders stood. Addison.

3. Last; that beyond which there is nothing.

Farewell, ungrateful and unkind! I go,
Condemn'd by thee, to those sad shades below:
I go th' extremest remedy to prove,
To drink oblivion, and to drench my love. Dryd.

4. Pressing in the utmost degree.

Cases of necessity being sometime but urgent, sometime extreme, the consideration of publick utility is urged equivalent to the easier kind of necessity. Hooker.

5. Rigorous; strict.

If thou be extreme to mark what is amiss, O Lord, who shall abide it? Psalms.

EXTRE'ME. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. Utmost point; highest degree of any thing.

Thither by harpy-footed furies hal'd,
At certain revolutions, all the damn'd
Are brought; and feel by turns the bitter change
Of fierce extremes, extremes by change more fierce;
From beds of raging fire to starve in ice
Their soft ethereal warmth, and there to pine
Immoveable, infix'd, and frozen round
Periods of time; thence hurried back to fire. Milt.

Avoid extremes, and shun the faults of such
Who still are pleas'd too little, or too much. Pope.

They cannot bear that human nature, which they know to be imperfect, should be raised in an extreme, without opposition. Pope's Essay on Homer.

2. Points at the greatest distance from each other; extremity.

The true Protestant religion is situated in the golden mean: the extremes unto her are the extremes on either hand. Bacon.

The syllogistical form only shews, that if the intermediate idea agrees with those it is on both sides immediately applied to, then those two remote ones, or, as they are called, extremes, do certainly agree. Locke.

EXTRE'MELY. adv. [from extreme.]

1. In the utmost degree.

She might hear, not far from her, an extremely doleful voice; but so suppressed with a kind of whispering note, that he could not conceive the words distinctly. Sidney.

2. Very much; greatly: in familiar language.

Whoever sees a scoundrel in a gown reeling home at midnight, is apt to be extremely comforted in his own vices. Swift.

EXTRE'MITY. n. s. [extremitas, Lat.]

I wish peace, and any terms prefer,
Before the last extremities of war. Dryden.

7. The most aggravated state.

The world is running mad after farce, the extremity of bad poetry; or rather the judgment that is fallen upon dramatic writing. Dryden.

To* EXTRICATE. v. a. [extrico, Lat.] To disembarrass, to set free any one in a state of perplexity; to disentangle.

We run into great difficulties about free created agents, which reason cannot well disentangle itself out of. Locke.

These are reliefs to Nature, as they give her an opportunity of extricating herself from her oppressions, and recovering the several tones and springs of her vessels. Addison.

EXTRICA'TION. n. s. [from extricate.] The act of disentangling; disentanglement.

Crude salt has a taste not properly acid, but such as predominates in brine; and it does not appear that this acid spirit did as such pre-exist in the salt whence it was obtained, so that we may suppose it to have been rather by transmutation than extrication. Boyle.

EXTRI'NSICAL. adj. [extrinsecus, Lat.] External; outward; not intimately belonging; not intrinsick. It is commonly written so, but analogy requires extrinsecal.

A body cannot move, unless it be moved by some extrinsical agent: absurd it is to think that a body, by a quality in it, can work upon itself. Digby on Bodies.

Neither is the atom by any extrinsical impulse diverted from its natural course: Ray.

Outward objects, that are extrinsical to the mind; and its own operation, proceeding from powers intrinsical, and proper to itself, which, when reflected on by itself, become also objects of its contemplation, are the original of all knowledge. Locke

EXTRI'NSICALLY. adv. [from extrinsical.] From without.

If to suppose the soul a distinct substance from the body, and extrinsically advenient, be an error, almost all the world hath been mistaken. Glanv.

EXTRI'NSICK. adj. [extrinsecus, Lat.] Outward; external.

When they cannot shake the main fort, they try if they can possess themselves of the outworks, raise some prejudice against his most extrinsick adherents. Gov. of the Tongue.

Extrinsick modes are such as arise from something that is not in the subject or substance itself; but it is a manner of being which some substances attain, by reason of something external or foreign to the subject; as, this globe lies within two yards of the wall; this man is beloved or hated. Watts's Logick.

To* EXTRU'CT. v. a. [extruo, extructum, Lat.] To build; to raise; to form into a structure.

Slitting the back and fingers of a glove, I made eyelet holes to draw it close. Wiseman's Surgery.

EY'ELID. n. s. [eye and lid.] The membrane that shuts over the eye.

Mark when she miles with amiable cheer,
And tell me whereto can ye liken it!
When on each eyelid sweetly do appear
An hundred graces as in shade to sit.
Spenser's Sonnets.

On my eyelids is the shadow of death.
Job. xvi. 16.

Fetch me that flower; the herb I shew'd thee once;
The juice of it, on sleeping eyelids laid,
Will make or man or woman madly doat
Upon the next live creature that it sees. Shakesp.

The Turks have a black powder, made of a mineral called alcohol, which with a fine long pencil they lay under their eyelids, which doth colour black, whereby the white of the eye is set off more white. Bacon's Natural History.

At length, the crackling noise and dreadful blaze
Call'd up some waking lover to the sight;
And long it was ere he the rest could raise,
Whose heavy eyelids yet were full of night.
Dryden.

EYESE'RVANT. n. s. [eye and servant.] A servant that works only while watched.

EYESE'RVICE. n. s. [eye and service.] Service performed only under inspection.

Servants, obey in all things your masters; not with eyeservice, as men-pleasers, but in singleness of heart. Col. iii.

EY'ESHOT. n. s. [eye and shot] Sight; glance; view.

I must not think of sharing the booty before I am free from danger, and out of eyeshot from the other windows. Dryden.

I have preserved many a young man from her eyeshot by this means. Spectator.

EY'ESIGHT. n. s. [eye and sight.] Sight of the eye.

The Lord hath recompensed me according to my cleanness in his eyesight. 2 Sam.

Methinks I see thee, now thou art below,
As one dead in the bottom of a tomb;
Either my eyesight fails, or thou look'st pale.
Shakesp.

Though sight be lost,
Life yet hath many solaces, enjoy'd
Where other senses want not their delights,
At home in leisure and domestick ease,
Exempt from many a care and chance, to which
Eyesight exposes daily men abroad.
Milton's Agonistes.

Josephus sets this down from his own eyesight, being himself a chief captain in the siege of Jopata, where these events happened. Wilkins.

He blinds the wise, gives eyesight to the blind,
And molds and stamps anew the lovers mind.
Dryden.

EY'ESORE. n. s. [eye and sore.] Something offensive to the sight.

Hath the church of Christ from the first beginning, by a secret universal instinct of God's good spirit, always tied itself to end neither sermon, nor almost any speech of moment, which hath concerned matters of God, without some special words of honour and glory to the Trinity, which we all adore; and is the like conclusion of psalms become now, at length, an eyesore, or a galling to the ears that hear it? Hooker.

Fy, doff this habit; shame to your estate,
And eyesore to our solemn festival. Shakesp.

As soon as the two lords came thither they covered, to the trouble of the other; but having presently to speak, they were quickly freed from that eyesore. Clarendon.

Mordecai was an eyesore to Haman L'Estrange.

He's the best piece of man's flesh in the market; not an eyesore in his whole body.
Dryden's Don Sebastian.

EYESPO'TTED. adj. [eye and spot.] Marked with spots like eyes.

Nor Juno's bird, in her eyespotted train,
So many goodly colours doth contain. Spenser.

EY'ESTRING. n. s. [eye and string.] The string of the eye; the tendon by which the eye is moved.

I would have broke mine eyestrings; crackt them, but
To look upon him. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

To know whether the sheep are sound or not, see that their gums be red and the eyestrings ruddy. Mortimer.

EY'ETOOTH. n. s. [eye and tooth.] The tooth on the upper jaw next on each side to the grinders; the fang.

The next tooth on each side stronger and deeper rooted, and more pointed, called canini, in English eyeteeth, to tear the more tough sort of aliments.
Ray on the Creation.

EY'EWINK. n. s. [eye and wink.] A wink, as a hint or token.

They would have won any woman's heart; and, I warrant you, they could never get an eyewink of her. Shakesp.

EYEWI'TNESS. n. s. [eye and witness.] An ocular evidence; one who gives testimony to facts seen with his own eyes.

We made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and were eyewitnesses of his majesty. 2 Peter.

To meet him all his saints, who silent stood
Eyewitnesses of his almighty acts,
With jubilee advanced. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The curious, by laying together circumstances, attestations, and characters of those who are concerned in them, either receive or reject what at first but eyewitnesses could absolutely believe or disbelieve. Addison on the Christian Religion.

EYRE. n. s. [eyre, Fr. iter, Lat.] The court of justices itinerants; and justices in eyre are those only, which Bracton in many places calls justiciarios itinerantes. The eyre also of the forest is nothing but the justice-seat, otherwise called; which is, or should, by ancient custom, be held every three years by the justices of the forest, journeying up and down to that purpose. Cowel.

EY'RY. n. s. [from ey an egg.] The place where birds of prey build their nests and hatch.

But I was born so high,
Our eyrie buildeth in the cedars top,
And dallies with the wind, and scorns the sun.
Shakesp.

The eagle, and the stork,
On cliffs and cedar-tops their eyries build.
Milton.

Some haggard hawk, who had her eyry nigh,
Well pounc'd to fasten, and well wing'd to fly.
Dryden.

F.

F A consonant generally reckoned by authors, and admitted by Scaliger, among the semi-vowels, and according to that opinion distinguished in the enumeration of the alphabet by a name beginning with a vowel, yet has so far the nature of a mute, that it is easily pronounced before a liquid in the same syllable. It has in English an invariable sound, formed by compression of the whole lips and a forcible breath. Its kindred letter is V, which, in the Islandic alphabet, is only distinguished from it by a point in the body of the letter.

FABA'CEOUS. adj. [fabaceus, Lat.] Having the nature of a bean. Dict.

FA'BLE. n. s. [fable, Fr. fabula, Lat.]

1. A feigned story intended to enforce some moral precept.

Jotham's fable of the trees is the oldest extant, and as beautiful as any made since. Addis. Spect.

2. A fiction in general.

Triptolemus, so sung the nine,
Strew'd plenty from his cart divine;
But, spite of all those fable-makers,
He never sow'd on Alnuaign acres. Dryden.

Palladius coming to die somewhere in the north part of Britain, may seem to give some kind of countenance to those fables that make him to have lived many years among the Scots. Lloyd.

3. A vitious or foolish fiction.

But refuse profane and old wives fables.
1 Tim. iv. 7.

4. The series or contexture of events which constitute a poem epick or dramatick.

The moral is the first business of the poet: this being formed, he contrives such a design or fable as may be most suitable to the moral. Dryden's Dufres.

The first thing to be considered in an epick poem is the fable, which is perfect or imperfect, according as the action, which it relates, is more or less so. Addison's Spectator.

5. A lye; a vitious falsehood. This sense merely familiar.

It would look like a fable to report that this gentleman gives away a great fortune by secret methods. Addison.

To FA'BLE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To feign; to write not truth but fiction.

That Saturn's sons receiv'd the three-fold reign
Of heav'n, of ocean, and deep hell beneath,
Old poets mention, fabling. Prior.

Vain now the tales which fabling poets tell,
That wav'ring conquest still desires to rove!
In Marlbro's camp the goddess knows to dwell. Prior.

2. To tell falsehoods; to lye: a familiar use.

He fables not: I hear the enemy. Shak. Hen. VI.

To FA'BLE. v. a. To feign; to tell falsely.

We mean to win,
Or turn this heav'n itself into the hell
Thou fablest. Milton's Par. Lost.

Ladies of th' Hesperides, they seem'd
Fairer than feign'd of old, or fabl'd since
Of fairy damsels met in forest wide,
By knights. Milton's Par. Lost.

FA'BLED. adj. [from fable.] Celebrated in fables.

Hail, fabled grotto! hail, Elysian soil!
Thou fairest spot of fair Britannia's isle! Tickell.

FA'BLER. n. s. [from fable.] A dealer in fiction; a writer of feigned stories.

To FA'BRICATE. v. a. [fabricor, Lat.]

1. To build; to construct.

2. To forge; to devise falsely. This sense is retained among the Scottish lawyers; for when they suspect a paper to be forged, they say it is fabricated.

FABRICA'TION. n. s. [from fabricate.] The act of building; construction.

This fabrication of the human body is the immediate work of a vital principle, that formeth the first rudiments of the human nature. Hale.

FA'BRICK. n. s. [fabrica, Lat.]

1. A building; an edifice.

There must be an exquisite care to place the columns, set in several stories, most precisely one over another, that so the solid may answer to the solid, and the vacuities to the vacuities, as well for beauty as strength of the fabrick. Wotton.

2. Any system or compages of matter; any body formed by the conjunction of dissimilar parts.

Still will ye think it strange,
That all the parts of this great fabrick change;
Quit their old station and primeval frame. Prior.

To FA'BRICK. v. a. [from the noun.] To build; to form; to construct.

Shew what laws of life
The cheese inhabitants observe, and how Fabrick their mansions. Phillips.

FA'BULIST. n. s. [fabuliste, Fr.] A writer of fables.

Quitting Æsop and the fabulists, he copies Boccace. Croxal.

Our bard's a fabulist, and deals in fiction. Garric.

FA'BULOUS. adj. [fabulosus, Lat.] Feigned; full of fables, invented tales.

A person terrified with the imagination of spectres, is more reasonable than one who thinks the appearance of spirits fabulous and groundless. Addison.

FA'BULOUSLY. adv. [from fabulous.] In fiction; in a fabulous manner.

There are many things fabulously delivered, and are not to be accepted as truths. Brown's Vulg. Err.

FACE. n. s. [face, Fr. from facies, Lat.]

1. The visage.

The children of Israel saw the face of Moses, that the skin of Moses's face shone. Ex. xxxiv. 35.

A man shall see faces, which, if you examine them part by part, you shall never find good, but take them together, are not uncomely. Bacon.

From beauty still to beauty ranging,
In every face I found a dart. Addison's Spectator.

2. Countenance; cast of the features; look; air of the face.

Kick'd out, we set the best face on't we could. Dryden's Virgil.

Seiz'd and ty'd down to judge, how wretched I!
Who can't be silent, and who will not lye:
To laugh, were want of goodness and of grace;
And to be grave, exceeds all power of face. Pope

3. The surface of any thing.

A mist watered the whole face of the ground. Genesis.

4. The front or forepart of any thing.

The breadth of the face of the house, towards the East, was an hundred cubits. Ezek. xli. 14.

5. Visible state of affairs.

He look'd and saw the face of things quite chang'd,
The brazen throat of war had ceas'd to roar;
All now was turn'd to jollity and game,
To luxury and riot, feast and dance. Milton.

This would produce a new face of things in Europe. Addison.

6. Appearance; resemblance; look.

Keep still your former face, and mix again
With these lost spirits; run all their mazes with 'em;
For such are treasons. Ben Jonson.

At the first shock, with blood and powder stain'd,
Nor heav'n, nor sea, their former face retain'd;
Fury and art produce effects so strange,
They trouble nature, and her visage change. Wal.

His dialogue has so much the face of probability, that some have mistaken it for a real conference. Baker.

7. Presence; sight; state of confrontation.

Ye shall give her unto Eleazar, and one shall slay her before his face. Numb. xix. 3.

Jove cannot fear; then tell me to my face,
That I of all the gods am least in grace. Dry. Iliad.

8. Confidence; boldness; freedom from bashfulness or confusion.

They're thinking, by his face,
To fasten in our thoughts that they have courage;
But 'tis not so. Shakesp. Julius Cæsar.

How many things are there which a man cannot, with any face or comeliness, say or do himself? A man can scarce allege his own merits with modesty, much less extol them: a man cannot sometimes brook to supplicate or beg. Bacon.

You'll find the thing will not be done
With ignorance and face alone. Hudibras.

You, says the judge to the wolf, have the face to challenge that which you never lost; and you, says he to the fox, have the confidence to deny that which you have stolen. L'Estrange.

This is the man that has the face to charge others with false citations. Tillotson, Preface.

9. Distortion of the face.

Shame in[illegible]?
Why do you ma[illegible] faces! Shakesp. Macbeth.

FACE to FACE. [An adverbial expression.]

1. When both parties are present.

It is not the manner of the Romans to deliver any man to die, before that he which is accused have his accusers face to face. Acts, xxv. 16.

2. Nakedly; without the interposition of other bodies.

Now we see through a glass darkly; but then face to face. 1 Cor. xiii. 12.

To FACE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To carry a false appearance; to play the hypocrite.

Thou needs must learn to laugh, or lye,
To face, to forge, to scoff, to company. Hubb. Tale.

2. To turn the face; to come in front.

Face about, man; a soldier, and afraid of the enemy! Dryden.

Then thrice the mounted squadrons ride around
The fire, and Arcite's name they thrice resound;

Hail and farewell they shouted thrice amain,
Thrice facing to the left, and thence they turn'd again. Dryden.

To FACE. v. a.

1. To meet in front; to oppose with confidence and firmness.

I'll face
This tempest, and deserve the name of king. Dry.

We get intelligence of the force of the enemy, and cast about for a sufficient number of troops to face the enemy in the field of battle Addis. on the War.

They are as loth to see the fires kindled in Smithfield as his lordship; and, at least, as ready to face them under a popish persecution. Swift.

2. To oppose with impudence; commonly with down.

We trepan'd the state, and fac'd it down
With plots and projects of our own. Hudibras.

Because he walk'd against his will,
He fac'd men down that he stood still. Prior.

3. To stand opposite to.

On one side is the head of the emperor Trajan; the reverse has on it the circus Maximus, and a view of the side of the Palatine mountain that faces it. Addison on Italy.

The temple is described square, and the four fronts with open gates, facing the different quarters of the world. Pope.

4. To cover with an additional superficies; to invest with a covering.

The fortification of Soleurre is faced with marble. Addison.

FA'CET. n. s. [facette, Fr.] A small surface; a superficies cut into several angles.

Honour that is gained and broken upon another, hath the quickest reflection, like diamonds cut with facets. Bacon.

FACE'TIOUS. adj. [facetieux, Fr. facetiæ, Lat.] Gay; chearful; lively; merry; witty. It is used both of persons and sentiments.

Socrates, informed of some derogating speeches used of him behind his back, made this facetious reply, Let him beat me too when I am absent. Government of the Tongue.

FACE'TIOUSLY. adv. [from facetious.] Gaily; chearfully; wittily; merrily.

FACE'TIOUSNESS. n. s. [from facetious.] Cheerful wit; mirth; gaiety.

FA'CILE. adj. [facile, Fr. facilis, Lat.]

1. Easy; not difficult; performable or attainable with little labour.

Then also those poets, which are now counted most hard, will be both facile and pleasant. Milton on Education.

To confine the imagination is as facile a performance as the Goteham's design of hedging in the cuckoo. Glanville.

By dividing it into parts so distinct, the order in which they shall find each disposed, will render the work facile and delightful. Evelyn's Kalendar.

This may at first seem perplexed with many difficulties, yet many things may be suggested to make it more facile and commodious. Wilkins.

2. Easily surmountable; easily conquerable.

The facile gates of hell too slightly barr'd. Milt.

3. Easy of access or converse; not haughty; not supercilious; not austere.

I meant she should be courteous, facile, sweet,
Hating that solemn vice of greatness, pride,
I meant each softest virtue there should meet,
Fit in that softer bosom to reside. Ben Jonson.

Raphael now, to Adam's doubt propos'd,
Benevolent and facile, thus reply'd. Milton.

4. Pliant; flexible; easily persuaded to good or bad; ductile to a fault.

Too facile then, thou did'st not much gainsay;
Nay didst permit, approve, and fair dismiss. Milt.

Since Adam, and his facile consort Eve
Lost Paradise, deceiv'd by me. Milton.

Some men are of that facile temper, that they are wrought upon by every object they converse with, whom any affectionate discourse, or serious sermon, or any notable accident, shall put into a fit of religion, which yet usually lasts no longer than till somewhat else comes in their way. Calamy.

To FACI'LITATE. v. a. [faciliter, Fr.] To make easy; to free from difficulty; to clear from impediments.

Choice of the likeliest and best prepared metal for the version will facilitate the work. Bacon.

They renewed their assault two or three days together, and planted cannon to facilitate their passage, which did little hurt; but they still lost many men in the attempt. Clarendon.

Though perspective cannot be called a certain rule of picture, yet it is a great succour and relief to art, and facilitates the means of execution. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

What produceth a due quantity of animal spirits, necessary facilitates the animal and natural motions. Arbuthnot on Diet.

A war on the side of Italy would cause a great diversion of the French forces, and facilitate the progress of our arms in Spain. Swift.

FACI'LITY. n. s. [facilité, Fr. facilitas, Lat.]

1. Easiness to be performed; freedom from difficulty.

Yet reason saith, reason should have ability
To hold these worldly things in such proportion,
As let them come or go with even facility. Sidney.

Piety could not be diverted from this to a more commodious business by any motives of profit or facility. Raleigh.

A war upon the Turks is more worthy than upon any other Gentiles, both in point of religion and in point of honour; though facility and hope of success might invite some other choice. Bacon.

2. Readiness in performing; dexterity.

They who have studied have not only learned many excellent things, but also have acquired a great facility of profiting themselves by reading good authors. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

The facility which we get of doing things, by a custom of doing, makes them often pass in us without our notice. Locke.

3. Vitious ductility; easiness to be persuaded to good or bad; ready compliance.

Facility is worse than bribery; for bribes come now and then: but if importunity or idle respects lead a man, he shall never be without them. Bacon.

'Tis a great error to take facility for goodnature; tenderness without discretion, is no better than a more pardonable folly. L'Estrange.

4. Easiness of access; complaisance; condescension; affability.

He [illegible]ens and yields himself to the man of business with difficulty and reluctancy; but offers himself to the visits of a friend with facility, and all the meeting [illegible]ness of appetite and desire. South.

FACINE'RIOUS. adj. [corrupted by Shakespeare from facinorous; facinous, facinoris, Lat.] Wicked; facinorous.

'Tis strange, 'tis very strange, that is the brief and the tedious of it; and he's of a most facinerious spirit that will not acknowledge it. Shakesp.

FA'CING. n. s. [from To face.] An ornamental covering; that which is put on the outside of any thing by way of decoration.

These offices and dignities were but the facings and fringes of his greatness. Wotton.

FACI'NOROUS. adj. [facinora, Lat.] Wicked; atrocious; detestably bad.

FACI'NOROUSNESS. n. s. [from facinorous] Wickedness in a high degree.

FACT. n. s. [factum, Lat.]

1. A thing done; an effect produced; something not barely supposed or suspected, but really done.

In matter of fact they say there is some credit to be given to the testimony of man; but not in matter of opinion and judgement: we see the contrary both acknowledged and universally practised all throughout the world. Hooker.

As men are not to mistake the causes of these operations, so much less are they to mistake the fact or effect, and rashly to take that for done which is not done. Bacon.

Those effects which are wrought by the percussion of the sense, and by things in fact, are produced likewise in some degree by the imagination: therefore if a man see another eat sour or acid things, which set the teeth on edge, that object tainteth the imagination. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Matter of fact breaks out and blazes with too great an evidence to be denied. South's Sermons.

2. Reality; not supposition; not speculation.

If this were true in fact, I do not see any colour for such a cloncusion. Addison on the War.

Manifold sins, though in speculation they may be separable from war, in reality and fact never fail to attend it. Smalridge.

3. Action; deed.

Unhappy man! to break the pious laws
Of nature, pleading in his children's cause:
Howe'er the doubtful fact is understood,
'Tis love of honour and his country's good;
The consul, not the father, sheds the blood. Dryd.

FA'CTION. n. s. [faction, Fr. factio. Lat.]

1. A party in a state.

The queen is valued thirty thousand strong;
If she hath time to breathe, be well assur'd
Her faction will be full as strong as ours. Shakesp.

They remained at Newbery in great faction among themselves. Clarendon.

FA'CTIONARY. n. s. [factionaire, Fr.] One of a faction; a party man. A word not in use.

Pr'ythee, fellow, remember my name is Menenius; always factionary of the party of your general. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

FA'CTIOUS. adj. [factieux, Fr.]

1. Given to faction; loud and violent in a party; publickly dissentious; addicted to form parties and raise public disturbances.

He is a traitor; let him to the Tower,
And crop away that factious pate of his. Shakesp.

Be factious for redress of all these griefs. Shakesp.

2. Proceeding from publick dissentions; tending to publick discord.

Grey-headed men and grave, with warriors mixd,
Assemble; and harrangues are heard; but soon
In factious opposition. Milton's Par. Lost.

Factious tumults overbore the freedom and honour of the two houses. King Charles.

Why these factious quarrels, controversies, and battles amongst themselves, when they were all united in the same design? Dryden.

FA'CTIOUSLY. adv. [from factious.] In a manner criminally dissentious or tumultuous.

I intended not only to oblige my friends, but mine enemies also: exceeding even the desires of those that were factiously discontented. K. Charles.

FA'CTIOUSNESS. n. s. [from factious.] Inclination to publick dissention; violent clamorousness for a party.

FA'CTITIOUS. adj. [factitius, Lat.] Made by art, in opposition to that which is made by nature.

In the making and distilling of soap, by one degree of fire the salt, the water, and the oil or grease, whereof that factitious concrete is made up, being boiled up together, are easily brought to incorporate. Boyle.

Hardness wherein some stones exceed all other bodies, and among them the adamant, all other stones being exalted to that degree that art in vain endeavours to counterfeit it; the factitious stones of chymists, in imitation, being easily detected by an ordinary lapidist. Ray on the Creation.

FACTOR. n. s. [facteur, Fr. factor, Lat.]

1. An agent for another; one who transacts business for another. Commonly a substitute in mercantile affairs.

Take on you the charge
And kingly government of this your land;
Not as protector, steward, substitute,
Or lowly factor for another's gain. Shak. Rich. III.

Piercy is but my factor, good my lord,
T' engross up glorious deeds on my behalf. Shak.

You all three,
The senators alone of this great world,
Chief factors for the gods. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleop.

We agreed that I should send up an English factor, that whatsoever the island could yield should be delivered at a reasonable rate. Raleigh's Apology.

The Scots had good intelligence, having some factors doubtless at this mart, albeit they did not openly trade. Hayward.

Vile arts and restless endeavours are used by some sly and venemous factors for the old republican cause. South.

All the reason that I could ever hear alledged, by the chief factors for a general intromission of all sorts, sects, and persuasions, into our communion, is, that those who separate from us are stiff and obstinate, and will not submit to the rules and orders of our church, and that, therefore, they ought to be taken away. South.

Forc'd into exile from his rightful throne,
He made all countries where he came his own;
And viewing monarchs secret arts of sway,
A royal factor for their kingdoms lay. Dryden.

2. [In arithmetick.] The multiplicator and multiplicand. Harris.

FA'CTORY. n. s. [from factor.]

1. A house or district inhabited by traders in a distant country.

2. The traders embodied in one place.

FACTO'TUM. n. s. [fac totum, Lat. It is used likewise in burlesque French.] A servant employed alike in all kinds of business: as Scrub in the Stratagem.

FA'CTURE. n. s. [Fr.] The act or manner of making any thing.

FA'CULTY. n. s. [faculté, Fr. facultas, Lat.]

1. The power of doing any thing; ability; whether corporal or intellectual.

There is no kind of faculty or power in man, or any creature, which can rightly perform the functions allotted to it without perpetual aid and concurrence of that supreme cause of all things. Hook.

Orators may grieve; for in their sides,
Rather than heads, their faculty abides. Denham.

Reason in man supplies the defect of other faculties wherein we are inferior to beasts, and what we cannot compass by force we bring about by stratagem. L'Estrange.

2. Powers of the mind, imagination, reason, memory.

I understand in the prime end
Of nature, her the inferior; in the mind
And inward faculties, which most excel. Milton.

In the ordinary way of speaking, the understanding and will are two faculties of the mind. Locke.

Neither did our Saviour think it necessary to explain to us the nature of God, because it would be impossible, without bestowing on us other faculties than we possess at present. Swift.

3. Mechanical power.

The fifth mechanical faculty is the wedge used in cleaving wood. Wilkins.

4. [In physick.] A power or ability to perform any action, natural, vital, and animal: by the first they understand that by which the body is nourished, or another like it generated: the vital faculty is that by which life is preserved, and the ordinary functions of the body performed; and the animal faculty is what conducts the operations of the mind. Quincy.

5. A knack; habitual excellence; dexterity.

He had none of those faculties, which the other had, of reconciling men to him. Clarendon.

Our author found out monarchial absolute power in that text, he had an exceeding good faculty to find it himself where he could not shew it others. Locke.

He had an excellent faculty in preaching if he were not too refined. Swift.

6. Quality personal; disposition or habit of good or ill.

I'm traduc'd by tongues which neither know
My faculties nor person, yet will be
The chronicles of my doing. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

7. Natural virtue; efficacy.

In requital ope his leathern scrip,
And shew me simples of a thousand names,
Telling their strange and vigorous faculties. Milt.

8. Power; authority.

This Duncan
Hath born his faculties so meek, hath been
So clear in his great office, that his virtues
Will plead like angels. Shakesp. Macbeth.

9. Privilege; right to do any thing.

Law hath set down to what persons, in what causes, with what circumstances, almost every faculty or favour shall be granted. Hooker.

His works, which in our fall,
For us created, needs with us must fail,
Dependent made. Milton.

6. To decay; to decline; to languish.

Let none henceforth seek needless cause t'approve
The faith they owe; when earnestly they seek
Such proof, conclude, they then begin to fail. Milt.

I perceive
Thy mortal sight to fail: objects divine
Must needs impair and weary human sense. Milt.

7. To miss; not to produce its effect.

Consider of deformity not as a sign, which is deceivable, but as a cause which seldom faileth of the effect. Bacon.

All these puissant legions, whose exile
Hath emptied heav'n, shall fail to re-ascend. Milt.

This jest was first of th' other house's making,
And, five times try'd, has never fail'd of taking.
Dryden.

A persuasion that we shall overcome any difficulties that we meet with in the sciences, seldom fails to carry us through them. Locke.

He does not remember whether every grain came up or not; but he thinks that very few failed. Mortimer's Husbandry.

8. To miss; not to succeed in a design; to miscarry.

I am enjoin'd, by oath, if I fail
Of the right casket, never in my life
To woo a maid in way of marriage. Shakesp.

At least our envious foe hath fail'd, who thought
All like himself rebellious. Milton.

In difficulties of state, the ill success of failing proceeds from failings in the administration. L'Estrange.

Men who have been busied in the pursuit of the philosopher's stone, have failed in their design. Addison.

9. To be deficient in duty.

Or Nature fail'd in me, and left some part
Not proof enough such object to sustain. Milton.

Endeavour to fulfil God's commands, to repent as often as you fail of it, and to hope for pardon of him. Wake.

To FAIL. v. a.

1. To desert; not to continue to assist or supply; to disappoint.

The ship was now left alone, as proud lords be when fortune fails them. Sidney.

So hast thou oft with guile thine honour blent;
But little may such guile thee now avail,
If wonted force and fortune do not much me fail. Spenser.

There shall be signs in the sun, the moon, and the stars, men's hearts failing them for fear. Luke, xxi. 26.

Nor could the muse defend
Her son, so fail not thou who thee implores. Milt.

I laugh, when those who at the spear are bold
And vent'rous, if that fail them, shrink and fear.
Milton.

Her heart failed her, and she would fain have compounded for her life. L'Estrange.

He presumes upon his parts that they will not fail him at time of need, and so thinks it superfluous labour to make any provision before-hand. Locke.

2. Not to assist; to neglect; to omit to help.

Since nature fails us in no needful thing,
Why want I means my inward self to see? Davies.

3. To omit; not to perform.

The inventive god who never fails his part,
Inspires the wit when once he warms the heart.
Dryden.

4. To be wanting to.

There shall not fail thee a man on the throne. 1 Kings.

FAIL. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Miscarriage; miss; unsuccessfulness.

2. Omission; non-performance.

Mark and perform it, seest thou? for the fail
Of any point in't shall not only be
Death to thyself, but to thy lewd-tongu'd wife.
Shakesp.

3. Deficience; want.

4. Death; extinction.

How grounded he his title to the crown
Upon our fail? Shakesp. Henry VIII.

FA'ILING. n. s. [from fail.] Deficiency; imperfection; fault not atrocious; lapse.

Besides what failings may be in a matter, even in the expressions there must often be great obscurities. Digby

To failings mild, but zealous for desert;
The clearest head and the sincerest heart. Pope.

Even good men have many temptations to subdue, many conflicts with those enemies which war against the soul, and many failings and lapses to lament and recover. Rogers.

FAI'LURE. n. s. [from fail.]

1. Deficience; cessation.

There must have been an universal failure and want of springs and rivers all the Summer season. Woodward.

2. Omission; non-performance; slip.

He that, being subject to an apoplexy, used still to carry his remedy about him; but upon a time shifting his clothes, and not taking that with him, chanced upon that very day to be surprised with a fit: he owed his death to a mere accident, to a little inadvertency and failure of memory. South.

3. A lapse; a slight fault.

FAIN. adj. [ꝼeaȝen, Sax.]

1. Glad; merry; cheerful; fond. It is still retained in Scotland in this sense.

And in her hand she held a mirrour bright,
Wherein her face she often viewed fain. Fairy Q.

My lips will be fain when I sing unto thee, and so will my soul whom thou hast delivered. Ps. lxxi.

2. Forced; obliged; compelled. [This signification seems to have arisen from the mistake of the original signification in some ambiguous expressions; as I was fain to do this, would equally suit with the rest of the sentence, whether it was understood to mean I was compelled, or I was glad to do it for fear of worse. Thus the primary meaning seems to have been early lost.

Every weight to shroud it did constrain,
And this fair couple eke to shroud themselves
were fain. Spenser.

Whosoever will hear, he shall find God; whosoever will study to know, shall be also fain to believe. Hooker.

FAIN. adv. [from the adjective.] Gladly; very desirously; according to earnest wishes.

Now I would give a thousand furlongs of sea for an acre of barren ground: I would fain die a dry death. Shakesp.

Why would'st thou urge me to confess a flame
I long have stifled, and would fain conceal. Addis.

Fain would I Raphael's godlike art rehearse,
And show th' immortal labours in my verse. Addis.

The plebeians would fain have a law enacted to lay all men's rights and privileges upon the same level. Swift.

To FAIN. v. n. [from the noun.] To wish; to desire fondly.

Fairer than fairest, in his fayning eye,
Whose sole aspect he counts felicity. Spens. on Love.

To FAINT. v. n. [faner, Fr.]

1. To decay; to wear or waste away quickly.

Gilded clouds, while we gaze upon them, faint before the eye, and decay into confusion. Pope.

The show'ry arch
Delights and puzzles the beholder's eyes,
That views the wat'ry brede with thousand shews
Of painture vary'd; yet unskill'd to tell
Or where one colour rises, or where one faints.
Philips.

2. To lose the animal functions; to sink motionless and senseless.

Their young children were out of heart, and their women and young men fainted for thirst and fell down. Judith

FA'INTLING. adj. [from faint.] Timorous; feebleminded. A burlesque or low word.

There's no having patience, thou art such a faintling silly creature. Arbuth. Hist. of John Bull.

FA'INTLY. adv. [from faint.]

1. Feebly; languidly.

Love's like a torch, which, if secur'd from blasts,
Will faintly burn; but then it longer lasts:
Expos'd to storms of jealousy and doubt,
The blaze grows greater, but 'tis sooner out. Walsh.

2. Not in bright colours.

Nature affords at least a glimm'ring light;
The lines, tho' touched but faintly, are drawn right. Pope.

3. Without force of representation.

I have told you what I have seen and heard but faintly; nothing like the image and horrour of it. Shakesp. King Lear.

An obscure and confused idea represents the object so faintly, that it doth not appear plain to the mind. Watts.

4. Without strength of body.

With his loll'd tongue he faintly licks his prey,
His warm breath blows her fix up as she lies. Dry.

5. Not vigorously; not actively.

When Winter frosts constrain the field with cold,
The fainty root can take no steady hold. Dryden.

The ladies gasp'd, and scarcely could respire;
The breath they drew, no longer air, but fire:
The fainty knights were scorch'd, and knew not where
To run for shelter; for no shade was near. Dryd.

FAIR. adj. [fæger. Sax. faur, Dan.]

1. Beautiful; elegant of feature; handsome. Fair seems in the common acceptation to be restrained, when applied to woman, to the beauty of the face.

He only fair, and what he fair hath made,
All other fair like flowers untimely fade. Spenser.

Thou art a fair woman to look upon. Gen. xii. 11.

2. Not black; not brown; white in the complexion.

I never yet saw man,
But she would spell him backward; if fair fac'd,
She'd swear the gentleman should be her sister;
If black, why, nature, drawing of an antick,
Made a foul blot. Shak. Much Ado about Nothing.

Let us look upon men in several climates: the Ethiopians or black, flat-nosed, and crisp-haired: the Moors tawny; the Nothern people large, and fair complexioned. Hale.

FAIR. adv. [from the adjective.]

1. Gently; decently; without violence.

He who fair and softly goes steadily forward, in a course that points right, will sooner be at his journey's end, than he that runs after every one, though he gallop. Locke.

2. Civilly; complaisantly.

Well, you must now speak sir John Falstaff fair. Shakesp.

One of the company spoke him fair, and would have stopt his mouth with a crust. L'Estrange.

In this plain fable you th' effect may see
Of negligence, and fond credulity;
And learn besides of flatt'rers to beware,
Then most pernicious when they speak too fair.
Dryden.

His promise Palamon accepts; but pray'd
To keep it better than the first he made:
Thus fair they parted, 'till to morrow's dawn;
For each had laid his plighted faith to pawn. Dryd.

Kalib ascend, my fair spoke servant rise,
And soothe my heart with pleasing prophecies.
Dryden.

This promised fair at first. Addison on Italy.

3. Happily; successfully.

55. To fall over. To revolt; to desert from one side to the other.

And do'st thou now fall over to my foes?
Thou wear a lion's hide! doff it, for shame,
And hang a calve's skin on those recreant limbs.
Shakesp. K. John.

56. To fall out. To quarrel; to jar; to grow contentious.

Little needed those proofs to one who would have fallen out with herself, rather than make any conjectures to Zelmane's speeches. Sidney.

How fell you out, say that?
—No contraries hold more antipathy,
Than I and such a knave. Shakesp. K. Lear.

Meeting her of late behind the wood,
Seeking sweet favours for this hateful fool,
I did upbraid her, and fall out with her. Shakesp.

The cedar, by the instigation of the loyalists, fell out with the homebians, who had elected him to be their king. Howel.

A soul exasperated in ills, falls out
With every thing, its friend, itself. Addison's Cato.

It has been my misfortune to live among quarrelsome neighbours: there is but one thing can make us fall out, and that is the inheritance of lord Strut's estate. Arbuthnot's John Bull.

57. To fall out. To happen; to befall.

Who think you is my Dorus fallen out to be?
Sidney.

Now, for the most part, it so falleth out, touching things which generally are received, that although in themselves they be most certain, yet, because men presume them granted of all, we are hardliest able to bring proof of their certainty. Hooker.

It so fell out, that certain players
We o'er-rode on the way; of those we told him. Shakesp.

Yet so it may fall out, because their end
Is hate, not help to me. Milton's Agonistes.

There fell out a bloody quarrel betwixt the frogs and the mice. L'Estrange.

If it so fall out that you are miserable for ever, thou hast no reason to be surprised, as if some unexpected thing had happened. Tillotson.

58. To fall to. To begin eagerly to eat.

The men were fashion'd in a larger mould,
The women fit for labour, big and bold;
Gigantick hinds, as soon as work was done,
To their huge pots of boiling pulse would run;
Fall to, with eager joy, on homely food. Dryden.

59. To fall to. To apply himself to.

They would needs fall to the practice of those virtues which they before learned. Sidney.

64. To fall upon. To rush against.

At the same time that the storm bears upon the whole species, we are falling foul upon one another. Addison.

65. Fall is one of those general words of which it is very difficult to ascertain or detail the full signification. It retains in most of its senses some part of its primitive meaning, and implies either literally or figuratively descent, violence, or suddenness. In many of its senses it is opposed to rise; but in others has no counterpart or correlative.

To* FALL. v. a.

1. To drop; to let fall.

To-morrow in the battle think on me,
And fall thy edgeless sword, despair and die. Shak.

If that the earth could teem with woman's tears,
Each drop she falls would prove a crocodile. Shak.

Draw together;
And when I rear my hand, do you the like,
To fall it on Gonzalo. Shakesp. Tempest.

I am willing to fall this argument: 'tis free for every man to write or not to write in verse, as he thinks it is or is not his talent, or as he imagines the audience will receive it. Dryden.

2. To sink; to depress; the contrary to raise.

If a man would endeavour to raise or fall his voice still by half notes, like the stops of a lute, or by whole notes alone without halfs, as far as an eight, he will not be able to frame his voice unto it. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

3. To diminish; to let sink: opposed to raise.

Upon loaning interest to four per cent. you fall the price of your native commodities, or lessen your trade, or else prevent not the high use. Locke.

4. To yean; to bring forth

They then conceiving, did in yeaning time
Fall party-colour'd lambs, and those were Jacob's. Shakesp.

FALL. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The act of dropping from on high.

High o'er their heads a mould'ring rock is plac'd,
That promises a fall, and shakes at every blast. Dryden.

2. The act of tumbling from an erect posture.

I saw him run after a gilded butterfly; and when he caught it, he let it go again, and after it again; and over and over he comes, and up again, and caught it again; or whether his fall enraged him, or how it was, he did so set his teeth, and did tear it. Shakesp.

3. The violence suffered in dropping from on high.

My son coming into his marriage chamber, happened to have a fall, and died 2 lib x 48.

Spirit of wine, mingled with common water, if the first fall be broken, by means of a sop, or otherwise, stayeth above, and once it mingled, it severeth not again, as oil doth. Bacon's Phys. Rem.

A fever or fall may take away my reason Locke.

Some were hurt by the falls they got by leaping upon the ground. Gulliver's Travels.

4. Death; overthrow; destruction incurred.

Wail his fall,
Whom I myself struck down. Shakesp. Macbeth.

Our fathers were given to the sword, and for a spoil, and had a great fall before our enemies. Judith, viii. 9.

I will begin to pray before thee for myself and for them; for I see the falls of us that dwell in the land. 2 Esdr. viii. 17.

5. Ruin; dissolution.

Paul's, the late theme of such a muse, whose flight
Has bravely reach'd and soar'd above thy height;
Now shalt thou stand, though sword, or time, or fire,
Or zeal more fierce than they, thy fall conspire. Denham.

6. Downfall; loss of greatness; declension from eminence; degradation; state of being deposed from a high station; plunge from happiness or greatness into misery or meanness, or from virtue to corruption. In a sense like this we say the fall of man, and the fall of angels.

Her memory served as an accuser of her change, and her own handwriting was there to bear testimony against her fall. Sidney.

Perhaps thou talk'st of me, and do'st enquire
Of my restraint: why here I live alone;
And pitiest this my miserable fall. Daniel's Civil War.

He, careless now of int'rest, fame, or fate,
Perhaps forgets that Oxford e'er was great;
Or deeming meanest what we greatest call,
Beholds thee glorious only in thy fall. Pope to Parnel.

7. Declension of greatness, power, or dominion.

Till the empire came to be settled in Charles the Great, the fall of the Romans huge dominion concurring with other universal evils, caused those times to be days of much affliction and trouble throughout the world. Hooker.

8. Diminution; decrease of value.

That the improvement of Ireland is the principal cause why our lands in purchase rise not, as naturally they should, with the fall of our interest, appears evidently from the effect the fall of interest hath had upon houses in London. Child.

9. Declination or diminution of sound; cadence; close of musick.

That strain again; it had a dying fall:
O, it came o'er my ear, like the sweet South
That breathes upon a bank of violets,
Stealing and giving odours. Shakesp Twelfth Night.

How sweetly did they float upon the wings
Of silence, through the empty-vaulted night,
At ev'ry fall smoothing the raven down
Of darkness 'till it smil'd! Milton.

10. Declivity; steep descent.

Waters when beat upon the shore, or straitned, as the falls of bridges, or dashed against themselves by winds, give a roaring noise. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

11. Cataract; cascade; rush of water down a steep place.

There will we sit upon the rocks,
And see the shepherds feed their flocks
By shallow rivers, to whose falls
Melodious birds sing madrigals. Shakesp.

A whistling wind, or a melodious noise of birds, among the spreading branches, or a pleasing fall of water running violently, these things made them to swoon for fear. Wisd.

Down through the crannies of the living walls
The crystal streams descend in murm'ring falls. Dryden.

The swain, in barren deserts, with surprize
Sees lilies spring, and sudden verdure rise;
And starts, amidst the thirsty wilds, to hear
New falls of water murm'ring in his ear. Pope.

Now under hanging mountains,
Beside the falls of fountains,
He makes his moan;
And calls her ghost,
For ever, ever, ever lost! Pope's St. Cecilia.

12. The outlet of a current into any other water.

Before the fall of the Po into the gulph, it receives into its channel considerable rivers. Addison on Italy.

13. Autumn; the fall of the leaf; the time when the leaves drop from the trees.

What crouds of patients the town doctor kills,
Or how last fall he rais'd the weekly bills. Dryden.

14. Any thing that comes down in great quantities.

Upon a great fall of rain the current carried away a huge heap of apples. L'Estrange.

15. The act of felling or cutting down; as, the fall of timber.

FALLA'CIOUS. adj. [fallax, Lat. fallacieux, Fr.]

1. Producing mistake; sophistical. It is never used of men, but of writings, propositions, or things.

The Jews believed and assented to things neither evident nor certain, nor yet so much as probable, but actually false and fallacious; such as the absurd doctrines and stories of their rabbies. South's Sermons.

2. Deceitful; mocking expectation.

The force of that fallacious fruit,
That with exhilarating vapour bland
About their spirits had play'd, and inmost pow'rs
Made err, was now exhal'd. Milton's Par. Lost.

False philosophy inspires
Fallacious hope. Milton.

FALLA'CIOUSLY. adv. [from fallacious.] Sophistically; with purpose to deceive; with unsound reasoning.

We shall so far encourage contradiction, as to promise not to oppose any pen that shall fallaciously refute us. Brown.

We have seen how fallaciously the author has stated the cause, by supposing that nothing but unlimited mercy, or unlimited punishment, are the methods that can be made use of. Addison.

FALLA'CIOUSNESS. n. s. [from fallacious.] Tendency to deceive; inconclusiveness.

FA'LLACY. n. s. [fallacia, Lat. fallace, Fr.] Sophism; logical artifice; deceit; deceitful argument; delusory mode of ratiocination.

Most princes make themselves another thing from the people by a fallacy of argument, thinking themselves most kings when the subject is most basely subjected. Sidney.

Until I know this sure uncertainty,
I'll entertain the favour'd fallacy. Shakesp.

It were a mere fallacy, and mistaking to ascribe that to the force of imagination upon another body, which is but the force of imagination upon the proper body. Bacon.

All men, who can see an inch before them, may easily detect gross fallacies. Dryden.

FALLI'BILITY. n. s. [from fallible.] Liableness to be deceived; uncertainty; possibility of errour.

There is a great deal of fallibility in the testimony of men; yet some things we may be almost as certain of as that the sun shines, or that five twenties make a hundred. Watts.

FA'LLIBLE. adj. [fallo, Lat.] Liable to errour; such as may be deceived.

Do not falsify your resolutions with hopes that are fallible: to-morrow you may die. Shakesp.

He that creates to himself thousands of little hopes, uncertain in the promise, fallible in the event, and depending upon a thousand circumstances, often fail his expectations. Taylor.

Our intellectual or rational powers need some assistance, because they are so frail and fallible in the present state. Watts.

FA'LLING. } n. s. [from fall.] Indentings
EA'LLING in, } opposed to prominence.

The plowing of fallows is a benefit to land. Mortimer.

The best ploughs to plow up Summer fallow with. Mortimer.

2. Ground lying at rest.

Within an ancient forest's ample verge,
There stands a lonely but a healthful dwelling,
Built for convenience, and the use of life;
Around it fallows, meads, and pastures fair,
A little garden, and a limpid brook,
By nature's own contrivance seems dispos'd. Howe.

To FALLOW. v. a. To plow in order to a second plowing.

Begin to plow up fallows: this first fallowing ought to be very shallow. Mortimer's Husbandy.

FA'LLOWNESS. n. s. [from fallow.] Barrenness; an exemption from bearing fruit.

Like one, who, in her third widowhood, doth profess
Herself a nun, ty'd to retiredness,
So' affects my muse now a chaste fallowness. Donne.

FALSE. adj. [falsus, Lat. faux, fausse, Fr.]

1. Not morally true; expressing that which is not thought.

Innocence shall make
False accusation blush, and tyranny
Tremble at patience. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

There are false witnesses among men. L'Estrange.

2. Not physically true; conceiving that which does not exist.

For how can that be false, which ev'ry tongue
Of ev'ry mortal man affirms for true?
Which truth hath in all ages been so strong,
As loadstone like, all hearts it ever drew. Davies.
A farce is that in poetry which grotesque is in a picture: the persons and actions of a farce are all unnatural, and the manners false; that is, inconsistent with the characters of mankind. Dryden.

3. Succedaneous; suppositious.
Take a vessel, and make a false bottom of coarse canvass: fill it with earth above the canvass. Bacon.

4. Deceiving expectation; not solid; not sound.
He fell, as a huge rocky cliff,
Whose false foundation waves have wash'd away,
With dreadful poise is from the main land reft. Fairy Queen.

It left behind it false and slipp'ry ground. Dryd.
The heart of man looks fair, but when we come to lay any weight upon't, the ground is false under us. L'Estrange.

5. Not agreeable to rule, or propriety.
Now, fy upon my false French; by mine honour, in true English, I love thee, Kate. Shak.

6. Not honest; not just.
The true prince may, for recreation, prove a false thief; for the poor abuses of the times want countenance. Shakesp.
Men are spunges, which, to pour out, receive;
Who know false play, rather than lose, deceive. Donne.

7. Treacherous; perfidious; traiterous; deceitful; hollow.
I grant him bloody,
Luxurious, avaricious, false, deceitful,
Sudden, malicious, smacking of ev'ry sin
That has a name. Shakesp. Macbeth.
False of heart, light of ear, bloody of hand. Shakesp.
A man to whom he had committed the trust of his person, in making him his chamberlain; this man, no ways disgraced, no ways discontent, no ways put in fear, turns false unto him. Bacon's Henry VI.
So hast thou cheated Theseus with a wile,
Against thy vow, returning to beguile
Under a borrow'd name; as false to me,
So false thou art to him who set thee free. Dryden.
The ladies will make a numerous party against him, for being false to love in forsaking Dido. Dryden.

8. Counterfeit; hypocritical; not real: as, a false diamond.
Falfe tears true pity moves: the king commands
To loose his fetters. Dryden's Æneid.

9. In all these senses true is the word opposed.

FALSE. adv. Not truly; not honestly; not exactly; falsely.
What thou would'st highly,
That thou would'st holily; would'st not play false,
And yet would'st wrongly win. Shakesp. Macbeth.

To FALSE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To violate by failure of veracity.
Is't not enough that to this lady mild,
Thou falsed hast thy faith with perjury? Fairy Q.

2. To deceive.
Fair seemly pleasance each to other makes,
With goodly purposes there as they sit;
And in his falsed fancy he her takes
To be the fairest light that lived yet. Fairy Q.

3. To make feints; as fencers commonly do.
But, Guyon, in the heat of all his strife,
Was wary wise, and closely did await
Advantage, whilst his foe did rage most rise;
Sometimes athwart, sometimes he strook him strait,
And falsed oft his blows t'illude him with such bait. Fairy Q.

4. This word is now out of use.

FALSEHEA'RTED. adj. [false and heart.] Treacherous; perfidious; deceitful; hollow.
The traiterous or treacherous, who have misled others, are severely punished; and the neutrals and falsehearted friends and followers, who have started aside like a broken bow, he noted. Bacon.

FA'LSEHOOD. n. s. [from false.]

1. Want of truth; want of veracity.
Artificer of fraud; he was the first
That practis'd falshood under saintly show. Milton.
All deception in the course of life is, indeed, nothing else but a lie reduced to practice, and falsehood passing from words to things. South.

2. Want of honesty; treachery; deceitfulness; perfidy.
Nothing wants, but that thy shape,
Like his, and colour serpentine, may show
Thy inward fraud, to warn all creatures from thee
Henceforth; lest that too heav'nly form, pretended
To hellish falshood, snare them. Milton.

3. A lie; a false assertion.
In your answers there remains falshood. Job.

4. Counterfeit; imposture.
For no falshood can endure
Touch of celestial temper, but returns
Of force to its own likeness. Milton.

FA'LSELY. adv. [from false.]

1. Contrarily to truth; not truly.
Simeon and Levi spake not only falsely but insidiously, nay hypocritically, abusing proselytes and religion. Gov. of the Tongue.
Already were the Belgians on our coast,
Whose fleet more mighty every day became
By late success, which they did falsely boast,
And now by first appearing seem'd to claim. Dryd.
Tell him, I did in vain his brother move,
And yet he falsely said he was in love;
Falsely; for had he truly lov'd, at least
He would have giv'n one day to my request. Dryd.
Such as are treated ill, and upbraided falsely, find out an intimate friend that will hear their complaints, and endeavour to sooth their secret resentments. Addison's Spectator.

2. Erroneously; by mistake.
He knows that to be inconvenient which we falsely think convenient for us. Smalridge's Serm.

3. Perfidiously; treacherously; deceitfully.

FA'LSENESS. n. s. [from false.]

1. Contrariety to truth.

2. Want of veracity; violation of promise.
Suppose the reverse of virtue were solemnly enacted, and the practice of fraud and rapine, and perjury and falseness to a man's word, and all vice were established by a law, would that which we now call vice gain the reputation of virtue, and that which we now call virtue grow odious to human nature? Tillotson.

3. Duplicity; deceit; double dealing.
Piety is opposed to hypocrisy and insincerity, and all falseness or foulness of intentions, especially to personated devotion. Hammond's Fundam.

4. Treachery; perfidy; traiterousness.
King Richard might create a perfect guess,
That great Northumberland, then false to him,
Would of that seed grow to a greater falseness. Shakesp.
The prince is in no danger of being betrayed by the falseness, or cheated by the avarice of such a servant. Rogers.

FA'LSER. n. s. [from false.] A deceiver; an hypocrite. Now obsolete.
Such end had the falser; for he would weaned be
Of craft colour with simplicity;
And such end, Bardie, does all them remain,
That of such falser's friendship been fain Spenser.

FALSIFI'ABLE. adj. [from falsify.] Liable to be counterfeited or corrupted.

FALSIFICA'TION. n. s. [falsification, Fr. from falsify.]

1. The act of counterfeiting any thing so as to make it appear what it is not.
Concerning the word of God, whether it be by misconstruction of the sense, or by falsification of the words, wittingly to endeavour that any thing may seem divine which is not, is very plainly to abuse, and even to falsify Divine evidence, which injury, offered but unto men, is most worthily counted heinous. Hooker.
To counterfeit the dead image of a king in his coin is an high offence; but to counterfeit the living image of a king in his person, exceedeth all falsifications; except it should be that of a Mahomet, that counterfeits Divine honour. Bacon.

2. Confutation.
The poet invents this fiction to prevent posterity from searching after this isle, and to preserve his story from detection of falsification. Broome.

FA'LSIFIER. n. s. [from falsify.]

1. One that counterfeits; one that makes any thing to seem what it is not.
It happens in theories built on too obvious or too few experiments, what happens to falsifiers of coin; for counterfeit money will endure some one proof, others another, but none of them all proofs.

2. A liar; one that contrives falsehoods.
Boasters are naturally falsifiers, and the people, of all others, that put their shams the worst together. L'Estrange.

To FA'LSIFY. v. a. [falsifier, Fr.]

1. To counterfeit; to forge; to produce something for that which in reality it is not.
We cannot excuse that church, which through corrupt translations of scripture, delivereth, instead of divine speeches, any thing repugnant unto that which God speaketh; or, through falsified additions, proposeth that to the people of God as Scripture, which is in truth no Scripture. Hooker.
The Irish bards use to forge and falsify every thing as they list, to please or displease any man. Spenser.
Falsifying the balance by deceit. Amos.

2. To confute; to prove false.
Our Saviour's prophecy stands good in the destruction of the temple, and the dissolution of the Jewish œconomy, when Jews and Pagans united all their endeavours, under Julian the apostate, to baffle and falsify the prediction. Addison.

3. To violate; to break by falsehood.
It shall be thy work, thy shameful work, which is in thy power to shun, to make him live to see thy faith falsified, and his bed defiled. Sidney.
He suddenly falsified his faith, and villainously slew Selymes the king, as he was bathing himself, mistrusting nothing less than the falsehood of the pirate. Knolles's History.
This superadds treachery to all the other pestilent ingredients of the crime; 'tis the falsifying the most important trust. Decay of Piety.

4. To pierce; to run through.
His crest is rash'd away, his ample shield
Is falsify'd, and round with jav'lins fill'd. Dryden.
Of this word Mr. Dryden writes thus: My friends quarrelled at the word falsified, as an innovation in our language. The fact is confessed; for I remember not to have read it in any English author; though perhaps it may be found in Spenser's Fairy Queen. But suppose it to be no there: why am I forbidden to borrow from the Italian, a polished language, the word which is wanting in my native tongue? Horace has given us a rule for coining words, si grœco fonte cadant, especially when other words are joined with them which explain the sense. I used the word falsify, in this place, to mean that the shield of Turnus was not of proof against the spears and javelins of the Trojans, which had pierced it through and through in many places. The words which accompany this new one, makes my meaning plain:
Ma si l' Usbergo d' Ambi era perfetto,
Che mas poter falsarlo in nessum canto.
Ariosto, cant. xxvi.

Falsar cannot otherwise be turned than by falsifier: for his shield was falsed, is not English. I might indeed have contented myself with saying his shield was pierced, and bored, and stuck with javelins. Dryden.

Dryden, with all this effort, was not able to naturalise the new signification, which I have never seen copied, except once by some obscure nameless writer, and which indeed deserves not to be received.

To FA'LSIFY. v. n. To tell lies; to violate truth.

This point have we gained, that it is absolutely and universally unlawful to lie and falsify. South.

FA'LSITY. n. s. [falsitas, Lat.]

1. Falsehood; contrariety to truth.

Neither are they able to break through those errours, wherein they are so determinately settled, that they pay unto falsity the whole sum of whatsoever love is owing unto God's truth. Hooker.

Can you on him such falsities obtrude?
And as a mortal the most wise delude? Sandys.

Probability does not make any alteration, either in the truth or falsity of things; but only imports a different degree of their clearness or appearance to the understanding. South.

2. A lye; an errour; a false assertion or position.

That Danubius ariseth from the Pyrenean hills, that the earth is higher towards the North, are opinions truly charged on Aristotle by the restorer of Epicurus, and all easily confutable falsities. Glanville's Scepsis.

To FA'LTER. v. n. [faltar to be wanting, Span. vaultur a stammerer, Islandick, which is probably a word from the same radical.]

1. To hesitate in the utterance of words.

With faltering tongue, and trembling ev'ry vein,
Tell on, quoth she. Fairy Queen.

The pale assistants on each other star'd,
With gaping mouths for issuing words prepar'd;
The still-born sounds upon the palate hung,
And dy'd imperfect on the falt'ring tongue. Dryd.

He changes, gods! and falters at the question:
His fears, his words, his look, declare him guilty. Smith.

2. To fail in any act of the body.

This earth shall have a feeling; and these stones
Prove armed soldiers, ere her native king
Shall falter under foul rebellious arms. Shakesp.

He found his legs faltar. Wiseman's Surgery.

3. To fail in any act of the understanding.

How far idiots are concerned in the want or weakness of any or all faculties, an exact observation of their several ways of faltering would discover Locke.

To FA'LTER. v. a. To sift; to cleanse. This word seems to be merely rustick or provincial.

Barley for malt must be bold, dry, sweet, and clean faltered from foulness, seeds and oats. Mortimer's Husbandry.

FA'LTERINGLY. adv. [from falter.] With hesitation; with difficulty; with feebleness.

To FA'MBLE. v. a [famler, Dan.] To hesitate in the speech. This word I find only in Skinner.

FAME. n. s. [fama, Lat. φάμα, Dorick.]

1. Celebrity; renown.

The house to be builded for the Lord must be exceeding magnifical, of fame and of glory throughout all countries. Chron.

The desire of fame will not suffer endowments to lie useless. Addison's Spectator.

What is this fame, for which we thoughts employ,
The owner's wife, which other men enjoy? Pope.

2. Report; rumour.

We have heard the fame of him, and all that he did in Egypt Jos. ix. 9.

I shall shew what are true fames. Bacon.

FA'MED. adj. [from fame.] Renowned; celebrated; much talked of.

He is fam'd for mildness, peace and prayer. Shakesp.

He purposes to seek the Clarian god,
Avoiding Delphos, his more fam'd abode,
Since Phlegian robbers made unsafe the road. Dryden.

Aristides was an Athenian philosopher, famed for his learning and wisdom; but converted to Christianity. Addison.

FA'MELESS. adj. [from fame.] Having no fame; without renown. Not in use.

Then let me, fameless, love the fields and woods,
The fruitful water'd vales and running floods May.

FAMI'LIAR. adj. [familiaris, Lat.]

1. Domestick; relating to a family.

They range familiar to the dome. Pope.

2. Affable; not formal; easy in conversation.

Be thou familiar, but by no means vulgar. Shak.

Be not too familiar with Poins; for he misuses thy favours so much, that he swears thou art to marry his sister Nell. Shakesp.

3. Unceremonious; free, as among persons long acquainted.

Kalandar streight thought he saw his niece Parthenia, and was about in such familiar sort to have spoken unto her; but she, in grave and honourable manner, gave him to understand that he was mistaken. Sidney.

4. Well known; brought into knowledge by frequent practice of custom.

I see not how the Scripture could be possibly made familiar unto all, unless far more should be read in the people's hearing than by a sermon can be opened. Hooker.

Let us chuse such noble counsel,
That war, or peace, or both at once, may be
As things acquainted and familiar to us. Shakesp.

Our sweet
Recess and only consolation left
Familiar to our eyes! Milton's Par. Lost.

One idea which is familiar to the mind, connected with others which are new and strange, will bring those new ideas into easy remembrance. Watts.

5. Well acquainted with; accustomed; habituated by custom.

Or chang'd at length, and to the place conform'd
In temper and in nature, will receive
Familiar the fierce heat, and void of pain. Milton.

The senses at first let in particular ideas; and the mind, by degrees, growing familiar with some of them, they are lodged in the memory, and names got to them. Locke.

He was amazed how so impotent and groveling an insect as I could entertain such inhuman ideas, and in so familiar a manner, as to appear wholly unmoved at all the scenes of blood and desolation. Gulliver's Travels.

Patient permit the sadly-pleasing strain,
Familiar now with grief, your tears refrain Pope.

6. Common; frequent.

To a wrong hypothesis may be reduced the errours that may be occasioned by a true hypothesis, but not rightly understood. there is nothing more familiar than this. Locke.

7. Easy; unconstrained.

He unreins
His muse, and sports in loose familiar strains. Addison.

8. Too nearly acquainted.

A poor man found a priest familiar with his wife, and because he [illegible] it abroad, and could not prove it, the priest sued him for defamation. Camden

FAMI'LIAR. n. s.

1. An intimate; one long acquainted.

The king is a noble gentleman, and my familiar. Shakesp.

When he finds himself avoided and neglected by his familiars, this affects him. Rogers.

2. A demon supposed to attend at call.

Love is a familiar; there is no evil angel but love. Shakesp.

FAMILIA'RITY. n. s. [familiarité, Fr. from familiar.]

1. Easiness of conversation; omission of ceremony; affability.

2. Acquaintance; habitude.

We contract at last such an intimacy and familiarity with them, as makes it difficult and irksome for us to call off our minds. Atterbury.

3. Easy intercourse.

They say any mortals may enjoy the most intimate familiarities with these gentle spirits. Pope.

To FAMILIA'RIZE. v. a. [familiariser, Fr.]

1. To make familiar; to make easy by habitude; to make common.

2. To bring down from a state of distant superiority.

The genius smiled upon me with a look of compassion and affability that familiarized him to my imagination, and at once dispelled all fear and apprehensions. Addison's Spectator.

FAMI'LIARLY. adv. [from familiar.]

1. Unceremoniously; with freedom like that of long acquaintance.

Because that I familiarly sometimes
Do use you for my fool, and chat with you,
Your sawciness will jest upon my love. Shakesp.

He talks as familiarly of John of Gaunt as if he had been sworn brother to him; and I'll be sworn he never saw him but once in the Tiltyard, and then he broke his head. Shakesp.

The governour came to us, and, after salutations, said familiarly, that he was come to visit us, and called for a chair and sat him down. Bacon.

2. Commonly; frequently; with the unconcernedness or easiness of long custom.

Lesser mists and fogs than those which covered Greece with so long darkness, do familiarly present our senses with as great alterations in the sun and moon. Raleigh's History.

3. Easily; without solemnity; without formality.

Horace still charms with graceful negligence,
And without method talks us into sense;
Will, like a friend, familiarly convey
The truest notions in the easiest way. Pope.

FAMI'LLE. [en famille, Fr.] In a family way; domestically.

Deluded mortals, whom the great
Chuse for companions tete-a-tete,
Who at their dinners, en famille,
Get leave to sit when e'er you will. Swift.

FA'MILY. n. s. [familia, Lat. famille, Fr.]

1. Those who live in the same house; household.

The night made little impression on myself, but I cannot answer for my whole family, for my wife prevailed on me to take somewhat. Swift.

2. Those that descend from one common progenitor; a race; a tribe; a generation.

Of Gershon was the family of the Libnites. Num.

3. A course of descent; a genealogy.

If thy ancient but ignoble blood
Has crept through scoundrels ever since the flood,
Go and complain thy family is young,
Nor own thy fathers have been fools so long. Pope.

4. A class; a tribe; a species.

There be two great families of things, sulphureous and mercurial, inflammable and not inflammable, mature and crude, oily and watry. Bacon.

FA'MINE. n. s. [famine, Fr. fames, Lat.] Scarcity of food; dearth; distress for want of victuals.

Our castle's strength
Will laugh a siege to scorn: here let them lie,
Till famine and the ague eat them up. Shakesp.

Famines have not been of late observed to be rare, partly because of the industry of mankind, partly by those supplies that come by sea, but principally by the goodness of God. Hale.

This city never felt a siege before,
But from the lake receiv'd its daily store;
Which now shut up, and millions crowded here,
Famine will soon in multitudes appear. Dryden.

To FA'MISH. v. a. [from fames, Lat. famis, old Fr.]

1. To kill with hunger; to starve; to destroy by want of food.

What, did he marry me to famish me? Shakesp.
The pains of famish'd Tantalus he'll feel,
And Sisyphus, that labours up the hill
The rowling rock in vain; and curst Ixion's wheel. Dryden.

2. To kill by deprivation or denial of any thing necessary to life. Milton uses it with of.

Thin air
Above the clouds will pine his entrails gross,
And famish him of breath if not of bread. Milton.

To FA'MISH. v. n. To die of hunger; to suffer extreme hunger.

You are all resolved rather to die than to famish. Shakesp.

FA'MISHMENT. n. s. [from famish.] The pain of hunger; want of food.

Apicius, thou did'st on thy gut bestow
Full ninety millions; yet, when this was spent,
Ten millions still remain'd to thee; which thou,
Fearing to suffer thirst and famishment,
In poison'd potion drank'st. Hakewill on Provid.

FAMO'SITY. n. s. [from famous.] Renown; celebrity. Dict.

FA'MOUS. adj. [fameux, Fr. famosus, Lat.]

1. Renowned; celebrated; much talked of and praised.

Henry the Fifth, too famous to live long;
England ne'er lost a king of so much worth. Shak.

There rose up before Moses two hundred and fifty princes of the assembly, famous in the congregation, men of renown. Numb. xvi. 2.

She became famous among women; for they had executed judgment upon her. Ezek. xxiii. 10.

Pyreius was only famous for counterfeiting all base things; as earthen pitchers, a scullery, rogues together by the ears, and swine tumbling in the mire, whereupon he was surnamed Rupographus. Peacham on Drawing.

I shall be nam'd among the famousest
Of women, sung at solemn festivals. Milton's Agon.

Many, besides myself, have heard our famous Waller own, that he derived the harmony of his numbers from the Godfrey of Bulloign, turned into English by Fairfax. Dryden.

2. It has sometimes a middle signification, and imports fame whether for good or ill.

Menecrates and Menas, famous pyrates,
Make the sea serve them. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleop.

FA'MOUSLY. adv. [from famous.] With great renown; with great celebration.

Then this land was famously enriched
With politick grave counsel; then the king
Had virtuous uncles to protect his grace. Shakesp.

They looked on the particulars as things famously spoken of and believed, and worthy to be recorded and read. Grew's Cos.

FA'MOUSNESS. n. s. [from famous.] Celebrity; great fame.

FAN. n. s. [vannus, Lat.]

1. An instrument used by ladies to move the air and cool themselves.

With scarfs, and fans, and double change of brav'ry,
With amber bracelets, beads, with all this knav'ry. Shakesp.

Flavia, the least and slightest toy
Can with resistless art employ:
In other hands the fan would prove
An engine of small force in love;
But she, with such an air and mien,
Not to be told or safely seen,
Directs its wanton motions so,
That it wounds more than Cupid's bow;
Gives coolness to the matchless dame,
To every other breast a flame. Atterbury.

The modest fan was lifted up no more,
And virgins smil'd at what they blush'd before. Pope.

2. Any thing spread out like a woman's fan into a triangle with a broad base.

As a peacock and crane were in company, the peacock spread his tail, and challenged the other to shew him such a fan of feathers. L'Estrange.

3. The instrument by which the chaff is blown away when corn is winnowed. [Van, Fr.]

Flaile, strawfork, and rake, with a fan that is strong. Tusser.

Asses shall eat clean provender, winnowed with the shovel and with the fan. Is. xxx. 24.

In the wind and tempest of fortune's frown,
Distinction, with a broad and powerful fan,
Puffing at all, winnows the light away. Shakesp.

For the cleansing of corn is commonly used either a wicker fan, or a fan with sails. Mortimer's Husb.

4. Any thing by which the air is moved; wings.

The pris'ner with a spring from prison broke;
Then stretch'd his feather'd fans with all his might,
And to the neighb'ring maple wing'd his flight. Dryden.

5. An instrument to raise the fire.

Nature worketh in us all a love to our own counsels: the contradiction of others is a fan to inflame that love. Hooker.

To FAN. v. a.

1. To cool or recreate with a fan.

She was fanned into slumbers by her slaves. Spectator.

2. To ventilate; to affect by air put in motion.

Let every feeble humour shake your hearts;
Your enemies, with nodding of their plumes,
Fan you into despair. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

The Norwegian banners flout the sky,
And fan our people cold. Shakesp. Macbeth.

The air
Floats as they pass, fann'd with unnumber'd plumes:
From branch to branch the smaller birds with song
Solac'd the woods, and spread their painted wings,
'Till even. Milton's Par. Lost.

The fanning wind upon her bosom blows;
To meet the fanning wind the bosom rose:
The fanning wind and purling streams continue her repose. Dryden's Cymon and Iphigenia.

Calm as the breath which fans our eastern groves,
And bright, as when thy eyes first lighted up our loves. Dryden.

And now his shorter breath, with sultry air,
Pants on her neck, and fans her parting hair. Pope.

3. To separate, as by winnowing.

I have collected some few, therein fanning the old, not omitting any. Bacon's Apothegms.

Not so the wicked; but as chaff, which, fann'd, The wind drives, so the wicked shall not stand In judgment. Milton.

FANA'TICISM. n. s. [from fanatick.] Enthusiasm; religious frenzy.

A church whose doctrines are derived from the clear fountains of the Scriptures, whose polity and discipline are formed upon the most uncorrupted models of antiquity, which has stood unshaken by the most furious assaults of Popery on the one hand, and fanaticism on the other; has triumphed over all the arguments of its enemies, and has nothing now to contend with but their slanders and calumnies. Rogers.

FANA'TICK. adj. [fanaticus, Lat. fanatique, Fr.] Enthusiastick; struck with a superstitious frenzy.

Osiris, Isis, Orus, and their train,
With monst'rous shapes and sorceries abus'd
Fanatick Egypt, and her priests, to seek
Their wand'ring gods disguis'd in brutish forms. Milton.

FANA'TICK. n. s. [from the adjective.] An enthusiast; a man mad with wild notions of religion.

The double armature of St. Peter is a more destructive engine, than the tumultuary weapon snatcht up by a fanatick. Decay of Piety.

FA'NCIFUL. adj. [fancy and full.]

1. Imaginative; rather guided by imagination than reason: of persons.

Some fanciful men have expected nothing but confusion and ruin from those very means, whereby both that and this is most effectually prevented. Woodward's Nat. History.

2. Dictated by the imagination, not the reason; full of wild images: of things.

What treasures did he bury in his sumptuous buildings? and how foolish and fanciful were they! Hayward.

It would show as much singularity to deny this, as it does a fanciful facility to affirm it. Garth.

FA'NCIFULLY. adv. [from fanciful.] According to the wildness of imagination.

FA'NCIFULNESS. n. s. [from fanciful.] Addiction to the pleasures of imagination; habit of following fancy rather than reason.

Albertus Magnus, with somewhat too much curiosity, was somewhat transported with too much fancifulness towards the influences of the heavenly motions, and astrological calculations. Hale.

FA'NCY. n. s. [contracted from phantasy, phantasia, Lat. φαντασία.] It should be phansy.

1. Imagination; the power by which the mind forms to itself images and representations of things, persons, or scenes of being.

Shakespeare, fancy's sweetest child!
Warble his native wood notes wild. Milton.

In the soul
Are many lesser faculties, that serve
Reason as chief: among these fancy next
Her office holds: of all external things,
Which the five watchful senses represent,
She forms imaginations, airy shapes,
Which reason joining, or disjoining, frames
All what we affirm, or what deny, and call
Our knowledge, or opinion. Milton's Par. Lost.

Though no evidence affects the fancy so strongly as that of sense, yet there is other evidence which gives as full satisfaction, and as clear a conviction to our reason. Atterbury.

Love is by fancy led about,
From hope to fear, from joy to doubt:
Whom we now a goddess call,
Divinely grac'd in every feature,
Strait's a deform'd, a perjur'd creature;
Love and hate are fancy all. Granville

2. An opinion bred rather by the imagination than the reason.

Men's private fancies must give place to the higher judgment of that church which is in authority over them. Hooker.

A person of a full and ample fortune, who was not disturbed by any fancies in religion. Clarendon.

I have always had a fancy, that learning might be made a play and recreation to children. Locke.

3. Taste; idea; conception of things.

The little chapel called the Salutation is very neat, and built with a pretty fancy. Addison.

4. Image; conception; thought.

How now, my lord, why do you keep alone;
Of sorriest fancies your companions making,
Using those thoughts which should indeed have died
With them they think on? Shakesp. Macbeth.

5. Inclination; liking; fondness.

His fancy lay extremely to travelling. L'Estrange.

For you, fair Hermia, look you arm yourself,
To fit your fancies to your father's will;
Or else the law of Athens yields you up
To death, or to a vow of single life. Shakesp.

A resemblance in humour or opinion, a fancy for the same business or diversion, is a ground of affection. Collier.

6. In Shakespeare it signifies love.

Tell me where is fancy bred,
Or in the heart, or in the head?
How begot, how nourished?
It is engender'd in the eyes,
With gazing fed, and fancy dies
In the cradle where it lies. Shakesp. Merch. of Ven.

7. Caprice; humour; whim.

True worth shall gain me, that it may be said
Desert, not fancy, once a woman led. Dryden.

The sultan of Egypt kept a good correspondence with the Jacobites towards the head of the Nile, for fear they should take a fancy to turn the course of that river. Arbuthnot.

One that was just entering upon a long journey, took up a fancy of putting a trick upon Mercury. L'Estrange.

8. False notion.

The altering of the scent, colour, or taste of fruit, by infusing, mixing, or cutting into the bark or root of the tree, herb, or flower, any coloured, aromatical, or medicinal substance, are but fancies: the cause is, for that those things have passed their period, and nourish not. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

9. Something that pleases or entertains without real use or value.

London-pride is a pretty fancy for borders. Mortimer.

To FA'NCY. v. n. [from the noun.] To imagine; to believe without being able to prove.

All are not always bound to hate and punish the true enemies of religion, much less any whom they may fancy to be so: all are always obliged to love its true friends, and to pray for its very enemies. Strutt's Sermons.

If our search has reached no farther than simile and metaphor, we rather fancy than know, and are not yet penetrated into the inside and reality of the thing; but content ourselves with what our imaginations furnish us with. Locke.

To FA'NCY. v. a.

1. To pourtray in the mind; to image to himself; to imagine.

But he whose noble genius is allow'd,
Who with stretch'd pinions soars above the crowd;
Who mighty thought can clothe with manly dress,
He whom I fancy, but can ne'er express. Dryden.

2. To like; to be pleased with.

Ninus both admiring her judgment and valour, together with her person and external beauty, fancied her so strongly, as, neglecting all princely respects, he took her from her husband. Raleigh.

It is a little hard that the queen cannot demolish this town in whatever manner she pleaseth to fancy. Swift.

FA'NCYMONGER. n. s. [from fancy.] One who deals in tricks of imagination.

There is a man haunts the forest, that abuses our young plants with carving Rosalind on their barks; hangs odes upon hawthorns, and elegies on brambles; all, forsooth, deifying the name of Rosalind. If I could meet that fancymonger, I would give him some good counsel; for he seems to have the quotidian of love upon him. Shakesp.

FA'NCYSICK. adj. [fancy and sick.] One whose imagination is unsound; one whose distemper is in his own mind.

'Tis not necessity, but opinion, that makes men miserable; and when we come to be fancysick, there's no cure. L'Estrange.

FAND for found. It is retained in Scotland.

This when as true by tryal he out fand,
He bade to open wide his brazen gate. Spenser.

FANE. n. s. [fane, Fr. funum, Lat.] A temple; a place consecrated to religion. A poetical word.

Nor fane nor capitol,
The prayers of priests, nor times of sacrifice,
Embarments all of fury, shall lift up
Their rotten privilege! Shakesp. Coriolanus.

Old Calibe, who kept the sacred fane
Of Juno, now she seem'd. Dryden's Æneid.

Yet some to fanes repair'd, and humble rites
Perform'd to Thor and Woden, fabled gods,
Who with their vot'ries in one ruin shar'd. Philips.

A sacred fane in Egypt's fruitful lands,
Hewn from the Theban mountain's rocky womb. Tickell.

The fields are ravish'd from the industrious swains,
From men their cities, and from gods their fanes. Pope.

FA'NFARON. n. s. [French, from the Spanish. Originally in Arabick it signifies one who promises what he cannot perform. Menage.]

1. A bully; a hector.

Virgil makes Æneas a bold avower of his own virtues, which, in the civility of our poets, is the character of a fanfaron or hector. Dryden.

2. A blusterer; a boaster of more than he can perform.

There are fanfarons in the trials of wit too, as well as in feats of arms; and none so forward to engage in argument or discourse as those that are least able to go through with it. L'Estrange.

FANFARONA'DE. n. s. [from fanfaron, Fr.] A bluster; a tumour of fictitious dignity.

The bishop copied this proceeding from the fanfaronade of Monsieur Bouffleurs. Swift.

To FANG. v. a. [fangan, Sax. vangen, Dut.] To seize; to gripe; to clutch. To vang is yet used in Devonshire.

Destruction fang mankind! Shakesp. Timon.

FANG. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The long tusks of a boar or other animal by which the prey is seized and held; any thing like 'em.

Here feel we but the penalty of Adam,
The season's difference; as the icy fang,
And churlish chiding of the Winter's wind;
Which, when it bites and blows upon my body,
Ev'n 'till I shrink with cold, I smile and say
This is no flattery. Shakesp. As you like it.

Some creatures have overlong or outgrowing teeth, which we call fangs or tusks; as boars, pikes, salmons, and dogs, though less. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Prepar'd to fly,
The fatal fang drove deep within his thigh,
And cut the nerves: the nerves no more sustain
The bulk; the bulk unprop'd, falls headlong on the plain. Dryden.

Then charge provoke the lion to the rage
Of fangs and claws, and, stooping from your horse,
Rivet the panting savage to the ground. Addison.

2. The nails; the talons.

3. Any shoot or other thing by which hold is taken.

The protuberant fangs of the yuca are to be treated like the tuberoses. Evelyn's Kalendar.

FA'NGED. adj. [from fang.] Furnished with fangs or long teeth; furnished with any instruments of destruction, which can be exercised in imitation of fangs.

My two schoolfellows,
Whom I will trust as I will adders fang'd,
They bear the mandate. Shakesp. Hamlet.

Not Scythians, nor fierce Dacians, onward rush
With half the speed, nor half so swift retreat:
In chariots, fang'd with scythes, they scour the field,
Drive through our wedg'd battalions with a whirl,
And strew a dreadful harvest on the plain. Philips.

FA'NGLE. n. s. [from fangan, Sax. to attempt. Skinner.] Silly attempt; trifling scheme. It is never used, or rarely, but in contempt with the epithet new; as, new fangles, new fanglenes.

FA'NGLED. adj. [from fangle.] This word seems to signify gawdy; ridiculously shewy; vainly decorated: new fangled, is therefore new-fashioned; dressed out in new decorations.

Quick wits be in desire new fangled, and in purpose unconstant. Ascham.

A book! oh, rare one!
Be not, as in this fangled world, a garment
Nobler than that it covers. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

FA'NGLESS. adj. [from fang.] Toothless; without teeth.

The king hath wasted all his rods
On late offenders, that he now doth lack
The very instruments of chastisement;
So that his power, like to a fangless lion,
May offer, but not hold. Shakesp. Henry IV.

FA'NGOT. n. s. A quantity of wares; as raw silk, &c. containing from one to two hundred weight three quarters. Dict.

FA'NNEL. n. s. [fanon, Fr.] A sort of ornament like a scarf, worn about the left arm of a mass-priest when he officiates. Dict.

FA'NNER. n. s. [from fan.] One that plays a fan.

I will send unto Babylon fanners that shall fan her. Jeremiah.

FA'NTASIED. adj. [from fantasy.] Filled with fancies or imaginations.

As I travell'd hither through the land,
I found the people strangely fantasied. Shak.

FA'NTASM. n. s. [See PHANTASM.] A thing not real, but appearing to the imagination.

FANTA'STICAL. } adj. [fantastique, Fr.
FANTA'STICK. } from fantasy.]

1. Irrational; bred only in the imagination.

The delight that a man takes from another's sin, can be nothing else but a fantastical, preternatural complacency, arising from that which he really has no feeling of. South.

2. Subsisting only in the fancy; imaginary.

Present feats
Are less than horrible imaginings:
My thought, whose murther yet is but fantastical,
Shakes so my single state of man, that function
Is smother'd in surmise; and nothing is,
But what is not. Shak. Macbeth.

Men are so possessed with their own fancies, that they take them for oracles; and are arrived to some extraordinary revelations of truth, when indeed they do but dream dreams, and amuse themselves with the fantastick ideas of a busy imagination. Decay of Piety.

3. Unreal; apparent only; having the nature of phantoms which only assume visible forms occasionally.

Are ye fantastical, or that indeed
Which outwardly ye shew? Shakesp. Macbeth.

4. Uncertain; unsteady; irregular.

Nor happiness can I, nor misery feel,
From any turn of her fantastick wheel. Prior.

5. Whimsical; fanciful; capricious; humourous; indulgent of one's own imagination.

They put such words in the mouths of one of these fantastical mind-infected people, that children and musicians call lovers. Sidney.

I'll knit it up in silken strings,
With twenty odd conceited true love knots:
To be fantastick, may become a youth
Of greater time than I. Shakesp. Two Gent. of Ver.

Duumvir is provided with an imperious, expensive, and fantastick mistress; to whom he retires from the conversation of a discreet and affectionate wife. Tatler.

We are apt to think your medallists a little fantastical in the different prices they set upon their coins, without any regard to the metal of which they are composed. Addison.

FANTA'STICALLY. adv. [from fantastical.]

1. By the power of imagination.

2. Capriciously; humorously; unsteadily.

England is so idly king'd,
Her sceptre so fantastically borne,
By a vain, giddy, shallow, humourous youth,
That fear attends her not. Shakesp. Henry V.

3. Whimsically; in compliance with imagination.

One cannot so much as fantastically chuse, even or odd, he thinks not why. Grew's Cosmol.

FANTA'STICALNESS. } n. s. [from fantas-
FANTA'STICKNESS. } tical.]

1. Humourousness; mere compliance with fancy.

2. Whimsicalness; unreasonableness.

I dare not assume to myself to have put him out of conceit with it, by having convinced him of the fantasticalness of it. Tillotson, Pref.

3. Caprice; unsteadiness.

FA'NTASY. n. s. [fantaisie, Fr. phantasia, Lat. φαντασία.]

1. Fancy; imagination; the power of imagining. See FANCY.

How now, Horatio? you tremble and look pale!
Is not this something more than fantasy? Shakesp.

I talk of dreams,
Which are the children of an idle brain,
Begot of nothing but vain fantasy;
Which is as thin of substance as the air,
And more unconstant than the wind. Shakesp.

He is superstitious grown of late,
Quite from the main opinion he held once
Of fantasy, of dreams, and ceremonies. Shakesp.

Go you, and where you find a maid,
That ere she sleep hath thrice her prayers said,
Rein up the organs of her fantasy,
Sleep she as sound as careless infancy. Shakesp.

These spirits of sense, in fantasy's high court,
Judge of the forms of objects, ill or well;
And so they send a good or ill report
Down to the heart, where all affections dwell.
Davies.

By the power of fantasy we see colours in a dream, or a mad man sees things before him which are not there. Newton.

2. Idea; image of the mind.

And with the sug'ry sweet thereof allure,
Chaste ladies ears to fantasies impure. Hubberd.

3. Humour; inclination.

I would wish that both you and others would cease from drawing the Scriptures to your fantasies and affections. Whitgift.

FA'NTOM. n. s. [See PHANTOM.] Something not real, but appearing to the imagination.

FAP. adj. Fuddled: drunk. It seems to have been a cant word in the time of Shakespeare.

The gentleman had drunk himself out of his five senses; and being fap, sir, was, as they say, cashiered. Shakesp.

FAR. adv. [ꝼeop, Sax. fatt, Erse.]

1. To great extent in length.

Pay sacred rev'rence to Apollo's song,
Lest wrathful the far-shooting god emit
His fatal arrows. Prior.

2. To a great extent every way. This is less proper.

Vast and great
Is what I love; the far-extended ocean
To a little riv'let I prefer. Prior.

With costly cates Rome stain'd her frugal board;
Then with ill-gotten gold she bought a lord:
Corruption, discord, luxury combin'd,
Down sunk the far-fam'd mistress of mankind.
Arbuthnot.

From the same lineage stern Æætes came,
The far-fam'd brother of th' enchantress dame.
Pope.

3. To a great distance progressively.

Be factious for redress of all these griefs,
And I will set this foot of mine as far
As who goes farthest. Shakesp. Julius Cæsar.

Is it far you ride?
—As far, my lord, as will fill up the time
'Twixt this and supper. Shakesp. Macbeth.

Far from that hated face the Trojans fly;
All but the fool who sought his destiny. Dryden.

4. Remotely; at a great distance.

He meant to travel into far countries, until his friends affection either ceased or prevailed. Sidney.

In a kingdom rightly ordered, after a law is once published, it presently takes effect far and wide; all states framing themselves thereunto.
Hooker.

And after that long strayed here and there,
Through every field and forest far and near.
Hubb.

Far be it from me to justify the cruelties used towards them, which had their reward soon after.
Bacon's Holy War.

He sent light horsemen into Mesopotamia with a guide, because the country was unto him best known; following not far after himself with all his army. Knolles.

And yet the lights which in my tower do shine,
Mine eyes, which view all objects nigh and far,
Look not into this little world of mine. Davies.

God hath bid dwell far off all anxious cares,
And not molest us; unless we ourselves
Seek them with wand'ring thoughts, and notions vain. Milton.

I have been hunting up and down, far and near, since your unhappy indisposition, to find out a remedy. L'Estrange.

The nations far and near contend in choice,
And send the flow'r of war by publick voice.
Dryd.

The painted lizard and the birds of prey,
Foes of the frugal kind, be far away. Dryden's Virg.

But from the reading of my book and me,
Be far, ye foes of virtuous poetry!
Who fortune's fault upon the poor can throw,
Point at the tatter'd coat and ragged shoe. Dryd.

Far off you view them with a longing eye
Upon the topmost branch. Dryden.

These words are so far from establishing any dominion, that we find quite the contrary. Locke.

Till on the Po his blasted corps was hurl'd,
Far from his country in the western world Addis.

5. To a distance.

As far as the East is from the West, so far hath he removed our transgressions from him.
Psalm ciii. 12.

Neither did those that were sent, and travelled far off, undertake any difficult enterprizes without a conductor. Raleigh.

But all in vain; which when he saw, he ceas'd
Contending, and remov'd his tents far off. Milton.

I had always a curiosity to look back into the sources of things, and view in my mind, so far as I was able, the beginning and progress of a rising world. Burnet's Theory.

A lion's hide around his loins he wore,
The well-poiz'd javelin to the field he bore,
Inur'd to blood; the far destroying dart,
And the best weapon, an undaunted heart.
Addison.

6. In a great part.

When they were by Jebus the day was far spent. Judges.

7. In a great proportion; by many degrees. It is commonly used with some word noting the comparative, but Dryden has used it absolutely.

Who can find a virtuous woman? for her price is far above rubies. Prov. xxxi. 10.

Such a communication passeth far better through the water than air. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Those countries have far greater rivers, and far higher mountains to pour down waters, than any part of the old world. Bacon.

The face of war,
In ancient times, doth differ far
From what our fiery battles are. Waller.

Of negatives we have far the least certainty, and they are usually hardest, and many times impossible to be proved. Tillotson.

Latin is a more succinct language than the Italian, Spanish, French, or even than the English, which, by reason of its monosyllables, is far the most compendious of them. Dryden.

The field is spacious I design to sow,
With oxen far unfit to draw the plough. Dryden.

Besides he's lovely far above the rest,
With you immortal, and with beauty blest. Pope.

Ah! hope not yet to breathe thy native air;
Far other journey first demands thy care. Pope.

8. To a great height; magnificently. This is perhaps only in Shakespeare.

I do not think
So fair an outward, and such stuff within,
Endows a man but him.
——You speak him far.
——I don't extend him, Sir. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

9. To a certain point; to a certain degree.

The substance of the service of God, so far forth as it hath in it any thing more than the law of reason doth teach, may not be invented of men, as it is amongst the heathen; but must be received from God himself. Hooker.

Answer them
How far forth you do like their articles. Shakesp.

Not to resolve, is to resolve; and many times it breeds as many necessities, and engageth as far in some other sort, as to resolve. Bacon.

Of this I need not many words to declare how far it is from being so much as any part of repentance. Hammond.

My discourse is so far from being equivalent to the position he mentions, that it is a perfect contradiction to it. Tillotson.

The custom of these tongues sometimes so far influences the expressions, that in these epistles one may observe the force of the Hebrew conjugations. Locke on St. Paul's Epistles.

10. Far off; at a great distance.

For though I fled him angry, yet recall'd
To life prolong'd, and promis'd race, I now
Gladly behold, though but his utmost skirts
Of glory, and far off his steps adore. Milton.

11. Far off. To a great distance.

Cherubic watch, and of a sword the flame
Wide-waving, all approach far off to fright,
And guard all passage to the tree of life. Milton.

12. Off is joined with far, when far noting distance, is not followed by a preposition: as, I set the boat far off, I set the boat far from me.

13. Far is used often in composition: as, farshooting, farseeing.

FAR-FE'TCH. n. s. [far and fetch.] A deep stratagem. A ludicrous word.

But Jesuits have deeper reaches,
In all their politick farfetches;
And from their Coptick priest, Kircherus,
Found out this mystick way to jeer us. Hudibras.

FAR-FETCHED. adj. [far and fetch.]

1. Brought from places remote.

Of these things others quickly will dispose,
Whose pains have earn'd the farfetch'd spoil. Milt.
By his command we boldly cross'd the line,
And bravely fought where southern stars arise:
We trac'd the farfetch'd gold into the mine,
And that which brib'd our fathers made our prize.
Dryden.

2. Studiously sought; elaborately strained; not easily or naturally introduced.

York, with all his farfetch'd policy. Shakesp.
For far fetched rhymes make puzzled angels strain,
And in low prose dull Lucifer complain. Smith.
Under this head we may rank those words which signify different ideas, by a sort of an unaccountable farfetched analogy, or distant resemblance, that fancy has introduced between one thing and another; as when we say, the meat is green when it is half roasted. Watts.

FAR-PIERCING. adj. [far and pierce.] Striking, or penetrating a great way.

Atlas, her sire, to whose farpiercing eye
The wonders of the deep expanded lie;
Th' eternal columns which on earth he rears,
End in the starry vault and prop the spheres. Pope.

FAR-SHOOTING. adj. [far and shoot.] Shooting to a great distance.

Then loud he call'd Æneas thrice by name;
The loud repeated voice to glad Æneas came;
Great Jove, he said, and the farshooting god,
Inspire thy mind to make thy challenge good.
Dryden.

FAR. adj.

1. Distant; remote.

A man taking a far journey. Mark.
But we must beg our bread in climes unknown,
Beneath the scorching or the freezing zone;
And some to far Oaxis shall be sold,
To try the Lybian heat, or Scythian cold. Dryd.

2. It was formerly used not only as an adverb but an adjective, with off.

These things seem small and undistinguishable,
Like far off mountains turned into clouds. Shakesp.
If we may behold in any creature any one spark of that eternal fire, or any far off dawning of God's glorious brightness, the same in the beauty, motion, and virtue of this light may be perceived.
Raleigh.

3. From far. In this sense it is used elliptically for a far, or remote place.

The Lord shall bring a nation against thee from far, from the end of the earth. Deut. xxvii. 49.

4. Remoter of the two; in horsemanship, the right side of the horse, which the rider turns from him when he mounts.

No true Egyptian ever knew in horses
The far side from the near. Dryden's Cleomenes.

5. It is often not easy to distinguish whether it be adjective or adverb: as,

The nations far and near canter'd in choice.
Dryden.

FAR. n. s. [contracted from farrow.] The offspring of a sow; young pigs.

Sows, ready to farrow at this time of the year,
Are for to be made of and counted full dear;
For now is the loss of the far of the sow
More great than the loss of two calves of the cow.
Tusser.

To FARCE. v. a. [farcio, Lat. farcir, Fr.]

1. To stuff; to fill with mingled ingredients.

Wrestling is a pastime which either the Cornishmen derived from Corineus, their first pretended founder, or at least it ministred some stuff to the farcing of that fable. Carew.
The first principles of Christian religion should not be farced with school points and private tenets Bp. Sanderson.

2. To extend; to swell out.

'Tis not the balm, the sceptre and the ball,
The sword, the mace, the crown imperial,
The enterlaru'd robe of gold and pearl,
The farced title running 'fore the king. Shakesp.

FARCE. n. s. [from the verb; or from farcer, Fr. to mock.] A dramatick representation written without regularity, and stuffed with wild and ludicrous conceits.

There is yet a lower sort of poetry and painting, which is out of nature; for a farce is that in poetry which grotesque is in a picture: the persons and actions of a farce are all unnatural, and the manners false; that is, inconsistent with the characters of mankind: grotesque painting is the just resemblance of this. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
What should be great, you turn to farce. Prior.
They object against it as a farce, because the irregularity of the plot should answer to the extravagance of the characters, which they say this piece wants, and therefore is no farce. Gay.

FA'RCICAL. adj. [from farce.] Belonging to a farce; appropriated to a farce.

They deny the characters to be farcical, because they are actually in nature. Gay.

FA'RCY. n. s. [farcina, Ital. farcin, Fr.] The leprosy of horses. It is probably curable by antimony.

FA'RDEL. n. s. [fardello, Ital. fardeau, Fr.] A bundle; a little pack.

Let us to the king: there is that in this fardel will make him scratch his beard. Shakesp.
Who would fardels bear,
To groan and sweat under a weary life? Shakesp.

To FARE. v. n. [ꝼaran, Sax. varen, Dut.]

1. To go; to pass; to travel.

At last, resolving forward still to fare,
Until the blust'ring storm is overblown. Fairy Q.
His spirits pure were subject to our sight,
Like to a man in shew and shape he fared. Fairf.
So on he fares, and to the border comes
Of Eden. Milton's Par. Lost.
Sadly they far'd along the sea-beat shore;
Still heav'd their hearts. Pope.

2. To be in any state good or bad.

So bids thee well to fare thy nether friend.
Fairy Queen.
A stubborn heart shall fare evil at the last. Eccles.
Well fare the hand, which to our humble sight
Presents that beauty. Waller.
So in thi throng bright Sacharissa far'd,
Oppress'd by those who strove to be her guard:
As ships, though never so obsequious, fall
Foul in a tempest on their admiral. Waller.
So fares the stag among th' enrag'd hounds;
Repels their force, and wounds returns for wounds.
Denham.
But as a barque, that, in foul weather,
Toss'd by two adverse winds together,
Is bruis'd and beaten to and fro,
And knows not which to turn him to;
So far'd the knight between two foes,
And knew not which of them t'oppose. Hudibras.
If you do as I do, you may fare as I fare.
L'Estrange.
Thus fares the queen, and thus her fury blows
Amidst the crowd. Dryden's Æn.
English ministers never fare so well as in a time of war with a foreign power, which diverts the private feuds and animosities of the nation.
Addison.
Some are comforted that it will be a common calamity, and they shall fare no worse than their neighbours. Swift.

3. To proceed in any train of consequences good or bad.

Thus it fareth when too much desire of contradiction causeth [illegible] speeches rather to pass by number than to stay [illegible] weight. Hooker.
So fares it when with [illegible] falsehood contends.
Milton.

4. To happen to any one well or ill: with it preceding in an impersonal form.

When the hand finds itself well warmed and covered, let it refuse the trouble of feeding the mouth, or guarding the head; 'till the body be starved or killed, and then we shall see how it will fare with the hand. South.

5. To feed; to eat; to be entertained with food.

The rich man fared sumptuously every day.
Luke.
Feast your ears with the musick awhile, if they will fare so harshly as on the trumpet's sound.
Shakesp. Timon.
Men think they have fared hardly, if, in times of extremity, they have descended so low as to eat dogs; but Galen delivereth, that, young, fat, and gelded, they were the food of many nations.
Brown's Vulg. Err.

FARE. n. s. [from the verb.

1. Price of passage in a vehicle by land or by water. Used only of that which is paid for the person, not the goods.

He found a ship going to Tarshish; so he paid the fare thereof, and went down into it, to go with them unto Tarshish. Jonah.
He passage begs with unregarded pray'r,
And wants two farthings to discharge his fare.
Dryden.

2. Food prepared for the table; provisions.

But come, so well refresh'd, now let us play,
As meet is, after such delicious fare. Milton.
But when the western winds with vital pow'r
Call forth the tender grass and budding flow'r,
Then, at the last, produce in open air
Both flocks, and send them to their summer's fare.
Dryden.
This is what nature's want may well suffice;
He that would more is covetous, not wise:
But since among mankind so few there are,
Who will conform to philosophick fare,
This much I will indulge thee for thy ease,
And mingle something of our times to please.
Dryden.
Upon his rising up he ordered the peasant to set before him whatever food he had in his house: the peasant brought out a great deal of coarse fare, of which the emperor eat very heartily. Addison.

FAREWE'LL. adv. [This word is originally the imperative of the verb farewell, or fare you well; sis felix, abi in bonum rem; or bene sit tibi; but in time use familiarised it to an adverb, and it is used both by those who go and those who are left.]

1. The parting compliment; adieu.

But farewell, king; sith thus thou wilt appear,
Freedom lives hence, and banishment is here.
Shakesp.
Whether we shall meet again, I know not,
Therefore our everlasting farewell take;
For ever, and for ever, farewell, Cassius. Shakesp.
Be not amazed, call all your senses to you; defend your reputation, or bid farewell to your good life for ever. Shakesp.
An iron slumber shuts my swimming eyes;
And now farewell, involv'd in shades of night,
For ever I am ravish'd from thy sight. Dryden.
Farewell, says he; the parting sound scarce fell
From his faint lips, but she replied farewell. Dryd.
O queen, farewell! be still possest
Of dear remembrance, blessing still and blest. Pope.

2. It is sometimes used only as an expression of separation without kindness.

Farewell the year, which threaten'd so
The fairest light the world can show. Waller.
Treading the path to nobler ends,
A long farewell to love I gave;
Resolv'd my country and my friends
All that remained of me should have. Waller.

3. Its original verbal meaning is preserved when it is used plurally.

Farewell, master Silence: I will not use many words with you; fare you well, gentlemen, both.
Shakesp. Henry IV.

FAREWE'LL. n. s.

1. Leave; act of departure.

See how the morning opes her golden gates,
And takes her farewell of the glorious sun. Shakesp.

If chance the radiant sun with farewell sweet
Extend his ev'ning beam, the fields revive,
The birds their notes renew, and bleeting herds
Attest their joy, that hill and valley ring. Milton.

As in this grove I took my last farewell,
As on this very spot of earth I fell. Dryden.

Before I take my farewell of this subject, I shall advise the author for the future to speak his meaning more plainly. Addison.

2. It is sometimes used as an adjective; leave-taking.

Several ingenious writers, who have taken their leave of the publick in farewell papers, will not give over so, but intend to appear again; though perhaps under another form, and with a different title. Spectator.

FARINA'CEOUS. adj. [from farina, Lat.] Mealy; tasting like meal or flower of corn.

The properest food of the vegetable kingdom for mankind is taken from the farinaceous or mealy seeds of some culmiferous plants; as oats, barley, wheat, rice, rye, maize, panick, and millet. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

FARM. n. s. [ferme, Fr. ꝑeopm provision, Sax.]

1. Ground let to a tenant; ground cultivated by another man upon condition of paying part of the profit to the owner or landlord.

They received of the bankers scant twenty shillings for thirty, which the Earl of Cornwall farmed of the king. Camden's Remains.

3. To cultivate land.

FA'RMER. n. s. [fermier, Fr. or from farm.]

1. One who cultivates hired ground.

Thou hast seen a farmer's dog bark at a beggar, and the creature run from the cur: there thou might'st behold the great image of authority; a dog's obeyed in office. Shakesp.

2. One who cultivates ground, whether his own or another's.

Nothing is of greater prejudice to the farmer than the stocking of his land with cattle larger than it will bear. Mortimer's Husbandry.

FA'RMOST. n. s. [superlative of far.] Most distant; remotest.

A spacious cave, within its farmost part,
Was hew'd and fashion'd by laborious art,
Through the hill's hollow sides. Dryden's Æn.

FA'RNESS. n. s. [from far.] Distance; remoteness.

Their nearness on all quarters to the enemy, and their farness from timely succour by their friends, have forced the commanders to call forth the uttermost number of able hands to fight. Carew.

FARRA'GINOUS. adj. [from farrago, Lat.] Formed of different materials.

Being a confusion of knaves and fools, and a farraginous concurrence of all conditions, tempers, sexes, and ages, it is but natural if their determinations be monstrous, and many ways inconsistent with truth. Brown's Vulg. Err.

FARRA'GO. n. s. [Lat.] A mass formed confusedly of several ingredients; a medley.

FA'RRIER. n. s. [ferrier, Fr. ferrarius, Lat.]

1. A shoer of horses.

But the utmost exactness in these particulars belongs to farriers, saddlers, smiths, and other tradesmen. Digby.

2. One who professes the medicine of horses.

If you are a piece of a farrier, as every groom ought to be, get sack, or strong-beer to rub your horses. Swift.

To FA'RRIER. v. n. [from the noun.] To practise physick or chirurgery on horses.

There are many pretenders to the art of farriering and cowleeching, yet many of them are very ignorant. Mortimer.

FA'RROW. n. s. [ꝑeapḥ, Sax.] A litter of pigs.

Pour in sow's blood that hath litter'd
Her nine farrow. Shakesp. Macbeth.

To FA'RROW. v. a. To bring pigs. It is used only of swine.

Sows ready to farrow this time of the year. Tusser.

The swine, although multiparous, yet being bisulcous, and only cloven-hoofed, is farrowed with open eyes, as other bisulcous animals. Brown.

Ev'n her, who did her numerous offspring boast,
As fair and fruitful as the sow that carry'd,
The thirty pigs at one large litter farrow'd. Dryd.

FART. n. s. [ꝑeꝛt. Sax.] Wind from behind.

Love is the fart
Of every heart;
It pains a man when 'tis kept close;
And others doth offend, when 'tis let loose. Suckl.

To FART. v. a. [from the noun.] To break wind behind.

As when we a gun discharge,
Although the bore be ne'er so large,
Before the flame from muzzle burst,
Just at the breech it flashes first;
So from my lord his passion broke,
He farted first, and then he spoke. Swift.

FA'RTHER. adv. [This word is now generally considered as the comparative degree of far; but by no analogy can far make farther or farthest: it is therefore probable, that the ancient orthography was nearer the true, and that we ought to write further and furthest, from forth, forther, forthest, ꝑoꝛðoꝛ, ꝑuꝛðeꝛ, Sax. the o and u, by resemblance of sound, being first confounded in speech, and afterwards in books.] At a greater distance; to a greater distance; more remotely; beyond; moreover.

To make a perfect judgment of good pictures, when compared with one another, besides rules, there is farther required a long conversation with the best pieces. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

They contented themselves with the opinions, fashions, and things of their country, without looking any farther. Locke.

FA'RTHER. adj. [supposed from far, more probably from forth, and to be written further.]

1. More remote.

Let me add a farther truth, that without ties of gratitude, I have particular inclination to honour you. Dryden.

2. Longer; tending to greater distance.

Before our farther way the fates allow,
Here must we fix on high the golden bough. Dryd.

FA'RTHERANCE. n. s. [more properly furtherance from further.] Encouragement; promotion.

That was the foundation of the learning I have, and of all the furtherance that I have obtained. Ascham's Schoolmaster.

FA'RTHERMORE. adv. [more properly furthermore.] Besides; over and above; likewise.

Farthermore the leaves, body, and boughs of this tree, by so much exceed all other plants, as the greatest men of power and worldly ability surpass the meanest. Raleigh's History.

To FA'RTHER. v. a. [more proper To further.] To promote; to facilitate; to advance.

He had farthered or hindered the taking of the town. Dryden.

The graves of the rebellious generations were already fashioned in the clouds, which soon after should swallow up all living creatures. Raleigh.

The rib he form'd, and fashion'd with his hands:
Under his forming hands a creature grew,
Man like, but different sex. Milton's Par. Lost.

Inability will every one find in himself, who shall go about to fashion in his understanding any simple idea, not received by his senses from external objects, or by reflection from the operations of his mind about them. Locke.

How could this noble fabrick be design'd,
And fashion'd, by a maker brute and blind?
Could it of art such miracles invent?
And raise a beauteous world of such extent?
Blackmore.

A different toil another forge employs,
Here the loud hammer fashions female toys.
Each trinket that adorns the modern dame,
First to these little artists ow'd its frame.
Gay's Fan.

2. To fit; to adapt; to accommodate.

Laws ought to be fashioned unto the manners and conditions of the people to whom they are meant, and not to be imposed upon them according to the simple rule of right. Spenser.

Ne do, I doubt, but that ye well can fashion
Yourselves thereto, according to occasion.
Hubberd's Tale.

Nature, as it grows again toward earth,
Is fashion'd for the journey, dull and heavy.
Shakesp.

O race divine;
For beauty still is fatal to the line. Dryden.

FA'TALIST. n. s. [from fate.] One who maintains that all things happen by inevitable necessity.

Will the obstinate fatalist find sufficient apology? Watts.

FATA'LITY. n. s. [fatalite, Fr. from fatal.]

1. Predestination; predetermined order or series of things and events; preordination of inevitable causes acting invincibly in perpetual succession.

The stoicks held a fatality, and fixed unalterable course of events; but then they held also, that they fell out by a necessity emergent from and inherent in the things themselves, which God himself could not alter. South.

2. Decree of fate.

By a strange fatality men suffer their dissenting to be drawn into the stream of the present vogue. King Charles.

All the father's precautions could not secure the son from the fatality of dying by a lion. L'Estrange.

3. Tendency to danger; tendency to some great or hazardous event.

Seven times seven, or forty-nine, nine times nine, or eighty-one, and seven times nine, or the years sixty-three, is conceived to carry with it the most considerable fatality. Bro.

FA'TALLY. adv. [from fatal.]

1. Mortally; destructively, even to death.

The stream is so transparent, pure, and clear,
That had the self-enamoured youth gaz'd here,
So fatally deceiv'd he had not been,
While he the bottom, not his face, had seen. Denham.

To the procession of a funeral vow,
Which Israel laws to Indian wives allow,
When fatally their virtue they approve;
Cheerful in flames, and martyrs of their love. Dryd.

2. By the decree of fate; by inevitable and invincible determination.

To say that the world was made casually by the concurrence of atoms, is to affirm that the atoms composed the world mechanically and fatally; only they were not sensible of it. Bentley.

FA'TALNESS. n. s. [from fatal.] Invincible necessity.

FATE. n. s. [fatum, Lat.]

1. Destiny; an eternal series of successive causes.

Necessity or chance
Approach not me; and what I will is fate. Milton.

There is a necessity in fate
Why still the brave bold man is fortunate. Dryden.

You must obey me soon or late;
Why will you vainly struggle with your fate! Dryd.

When empire in its childhood first appears,
A watchful fate o'ersees its rising years. Dryden.

Random chance, or wilful fate,
Guides the shaft from Cupid's bow. A. Philips.

Tell me what fates attend the duke of Suffolk?
By water shall he die, and take his end? Shakesp.

3. Death; destruction.

Viewing a neighbouring hill, whose top of late
A chapel crown'd, 'till in the common fate
Th' adjoining abbey fell. Denham.

Looking, he feeds alone his famish'd eyes;
Feeds ling'ring death, but looking not he dies;
Yet still he chose the longest way to fate,
Wasting at once his life and his estate. Dryden.

Courage uncertain dangers may abate;
But who can bear th' approach of certain fate! Dryden.

The whizzing arrow sings,
And bears thy fate, Antinous, on its wings. Pope.

4. Cause of death.

With full force his deadly bow he bent,
And feather'd fates among the mules and sumpters sent. Dryden.

FA'TED. adj. [from fate.]

FEE. n. s. [ꝼeoh, Sax. fee, Danish, cattle; feudum, low Lat. feu, Scottish.]

1. [In law.] All lands and tenements that are held by any acknowledgment of superiority to a higher lord. All lands and tenements, wherein a man hath a perpetual estate to him and his heirs, &c. are divided into allodium and feudum: allodium is every man's own land, which he possesses merely in his own right, without acknowledgment of any service, or payment of any rent to any other. Feudum, or fee, is that which we hold by the benefit of another, and in name whereof we owe services, or pay rent, or both, to a superior lord. And all our land in England, the crown-land, which is in the king's own hands, in right of his crown, excepted, is in the nature of feudum; for though a man have land by descent from his ancestors, or bought it for his money; yet is the land of such a nature, that it cannot come to any, either by descent or purchase, but with the burthen that was laid upon him who had novel fee, or first of all received it as a benefit from his lord, to him and to all such to whom it might descend, or be any way conveyed from him. So that no man in England has directum dominium, that is, the very property or demesne in any land, but the prince in right of his crown; for though he that has fee has jus perpetuum et utile dominium, yet he owes a duty for it, and therefore it is not simply his own. Fee is divided into two sorts; fee-absolute, otherwise called fee-simple, and fee-conditional, otherwise termed fee-tail.—Fee-simple is that whereof we are seised in those general words, To us and our heirs for ever: fee-tail is that whereof we are seised to us and our heirs, with limitation; that is, the heirs of our body. And fee-tail is either general or special: general is where land is given to a man, and the heirs of his body: fee-tail special, is that where a man and his wife are seised of land to them and the heirs of their two bodies. Cowel.

Now like a lawyer, when he land would let,
Or sell fee-simples in his master's name. Hubbert's Tale.

Here's the lord of the soil come to seize me for a stray, for entering his fee-simple without leave. Shakesp. Hen. VI.

2. Property; peculiarity.

What concern they?
The general cause; or is it a fee-grief,
Due to some single breast? Shakesp.

3. Reward; gratification; recompense.

These be the ways by which, without reward,
Livings in courts be gotten, though full hard;
For nothing there is done without a fee. Hubbert.

Not helping, death's my fee;
But if I help what do you promise me? Shakesp.

4. Payments occasionally claimed by persons in office.

Now that God and friends
Have turn'd my captive state to liberty,
At our enlargement what are thy due fees?
Shakesp Henry VI.

5. Reward paid to physicians or lawyers.

Reserve to each cattle their property fees. Tusser.

FE'EFARM. n. s. [fee and farm.] Tenure by which lands are held from a superiour lord.

John surrendered his kingdoms to the pope, and took them back again, to hold in feefarm; which brought him into such hatred, as all his lifetime after he was possest with fear. Davies.

To FEE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To reward; to pay.

No man fees the sun, no man purchases the light, nor errs if he walks by it. South.

Watch the disease in time; for when within
The dropsy rages, and extends the skin,
In vain for hellebore the patient cries,
And fees the doctor; but too late is wise. Dryden.

2. To bribe; to hire; to purchase.

I have long loved her, and ingrossed opportunities to meet her; feed every slight occasion, that could but niggardly give me sight of her. Shak.

3. To keep in hire.

There is not a thane of them but in his house
I have a servant feed. Shakesp. Macbeth.

FE'EBLE. adj. [foible, Fr.] Weak; debilitated; sickly; infirm; without strength of body or mind.

The men carried all the feeble upon asses to Jericho. 2 Chron.

Command th' assistance of a faithful friend,
But feeble are the succours I can send. Dryden.

How I have lov'd, excuse my falt'ring tongue;
My spirits feeble, and my pains are strong. Dryden.

We carry the image of God in us, a rational and immortal soul; and though we be now miserable and feeble, yet we aspire after eternal happiness, and finally expect a great exaltation of all our natural powers. Bentley.

Rhyme is a crutch that helps the weak along,
Supports the feeble, but retards the strong. Smith.

To FE'EBLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To weaken; to enfeeble; to deprive of strength or power. Not in use.

Or as a castle reared high and round,
By subtile engines and malicious slight
Is undermined from the lowest ground,
And her foundation forc'd and feebled quite.
Fairy Queen.

Shall that victorious hand be feebled here,
That in your chambers gave you chastisement?
Shakesp. King John.

FEEBLEMI'NDED. adj. [feeble and mind.] Weak of mind; defective in resolution and constancy.

Warn them that are unruly, comfort the feeble-minded, support the weak, be patient toward all men. 1 Thess.

FE'EBLENESS. n. s. [from feeble.] Weakness; imbecility; infirmity; want of strength.

A better head Rome's glorious body fits,
Than his that shakes for age and feebleness. Shak.

Some in their latter years, through the feebleness of their limbs, have been forced to study upon their knees. South.

FE'EBLY. adv. [from feeble.] Weakly; without strength.

Like mine, thy gentle numbers feebly creep,
Thy tragic muse gives smiles, thy comick sleep.
Dryden.

This hand, whose touch,
Whose ev'ry touch would force the feeler's soul
To th' oath of loyalty. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

2. The horns or antennæ of insects.

Insects clean their eyes with their forelegs as well as antennæ; and as they are perpetually feeling and searching before them with their feelers or antennæ, I am apt to think that besides wiping and cleaning the eyes, the uses here named may be admitted. Derham's Physico-Theology.

FE'ELING. participial adj. [from feel.]

1. Expressive of great sensibility.

O wretched state of man in self-division!
O well thou say'st a feeling declaration
Thy tongue hath made of Cupid's deep incision!
Sidney.

Thy wailing words do much my spirits move,
They uttered are in such a feeling fashion. Sidney.

Write 'till your ink be dry, and with your tears
Moist it again; and frame some feeling line,
That may discover such integrity. Shakesp.

2. Sensibly felt. This sense is not sufficiently analogical.

A most poor man made tame to fortune's blows,
Who, by the art of known and feeling sorrows,
Am pregnant to good pity. Shakesp.

I had a feeling sense
Of all your royal favours; but this last
Strikes through my heart. Southerne.

FE'ELING. n. s. [from feel.]

1. The sense of touch.

Why was the sight
To such a tender ball as th' eye confin'd;
So obvious and so easy to be quench'd,
And not, as feeling, through all parts diffus'd,
That she might look at will through every pore?
Milton.

2. Power of action upon sensibility.

The apprehension of the good,
Gives but the greater feeling to the worse.
Shakesp. Richard II.

3. Perception; sensibility.

Their king, out of a princely feeling, was sparing and compassionate towards his subjects. Bacon.

Great persons had need to borrow other men's opinions to think themselves happy: for if they judge by their own feeling, they cannot find it.
Bacon.

As we learn what belongs to the body by the evidence of sense, so we learn what belongs to the soul by an inward consciousness, which may be called a sort of internal feeling Watts.

FE'ELINGLY. adv. [from feeling.]

1. With expression of great sensibility.

The princes might judge that he meant himself, who spake so feelingly. Sidney.

He would not have talked so feelingly of Codrus's bed, if there had been room for a bedfellow in it. Pope.

2. So as to be sensibly felt.

Here feel we but the penalty of Adam,
The season's difference; as the icy phang,
And churlish chiding of the Winter's wind,
Which when it bites and blows upon my body,
Ev'n till I shrink with cold, I smile and say,
This is no flattery: these are counsellors,
That feelingly persuade me what I am. Shakesp.

He feelingly knew, and had trial of the late good, and of the new purchased evil. Raleigh.

FEET. n. s. The plural of foot.

His brother's image to his mind appears,
Inflames his heart with rage, and wings his feet with fears. Pope.

FE'ETLESS. adj. [from feet.] Being without feet.

Geoffrey of Poulloin broched three feetless birds, called Allerions, upon his arrow. Camden.

To FEIGN. v. a. [feindre, Fr. fingo, Lat.]

1. To invent; to image by an act of the mind.

Abominable, inutterable, and worse
Than fables yet have feign'd, or fear conceiv'd,
Gorgons, and hydras, and chimæras dire! Milton.

No such things are done as thou sayest, but thou feignedst them out of thine own heart. Neh. vi. 8.

2. To make a show of.

Both his hands, most filthy feculent,
Above the water were on high extent,
And feigned to wash themselves incessantly. Fairy Queen.

3. To make a shew of; to do upon some false pretence.

Me gentle Delia beckons from the plain,
Then hid in shades, eludes her eager swain;
But feigns a laugh to see me search around,
And by that laugh the willing fair is found. Pope.

4. To dissemble; to conceal. Now obsolete.

Each trembling leaf and whistling wind they hear,
As ghastly bug their hair on end does rear;
Yet both do strive their fearfulness to feign. Fairy Q.

To FEIGN. v. n. To relate falsely; to image from the invention; to tell fabulously.

Therefore the poet
Did feign that Orpheus drew trees, stones, and floods;
Since nought so stockish, hard, and full of rage,
But musick for the time doth change his nature. Shakesp.

FE'IGNEDLY. adv. [from feign.] In fiction; not truly.

Such is found to have been falsely and feignedly in some of the heathens. Bacon.

FE'IGNER. n. s. [from feign.] Inventer; contriver of a fiction.

And these three voices differ; all the things done, the doing and the doer; the thing feigned, the feigning and the feigner; so the poem, the poesy, and the poet. Ben Jonson.

FEINT. participial adj. [from feign, for feigned; or feint, Fr.] Counterfeit; seeming.

The mind by degrees loses its natural relish of real, solid truth, and is reconciled insensibly to any thing that can be but dressed up into any feint appearance of it. Locke.

FEINT. n. s. [feint, Fr.]

1. A false appearance; an offer of something not intended to be.

Courtly's letter is but a feint to get off. Spect.

FELI'CITY. n. s. [felicitas, Lat. felicité, Fr.] Happiness; prosperity; blissfulness; blessedness.

The joyous day, dear Lord, with joy begin,
And grant that we, for whom thou didest die,
Being with thy dear blood clean wash'd from sin,
May live for ever in felicity. Spenser's Sonnets.

Others in virtue plac'd felicity;
But virtue join'd with riches and long life,
In corporal pleasure he, and careless ease. Milton.

The felicities of her wonderful reign may be complete. Atterbury.

How great, how glorious a felicity, how adequate to the desires of a reasonable nature, is revealed to our hopes in the gospel. Rogers.

FE'LINE. n. s. [felinus, Lat.] Like a cat; pertaining to a cat.

Even as in the beaver; from which he differs principally in his teeth, which are canine, and in his tail, which is feline, or a long taper. Crew.

FELL. adj. [ꝑelle, Sax.]

1. Cruel; barbarous; inhuman.

It seemed fury, discord, madness fell,
Flew from his lap when he unfolds the same. Fairfax.

So fellest foes,
Whose passions and whose plots have broke their sleep,
To take the one the other, by some chance,
Some trick not worth an egg, shall grow dear friends. Shakesp.

2. Savage; ravenous; bloody.

That instant was I turn'd into a hart,
And my desires, like fell and cruel hounds,
E'er since pursue me. Shak. Twelfth Night.

I know thee, love! wild as the raging main,
More fell than tygers on the Lybian plain. Pope.

Scorning all the taming arts of man,
The keen hyena, fellest of the fell. Thomson.

FELL. n. s. [ꝑelle, Sax.] The skin; the hide. Not used.

Wipe thine eye;
The goujers shall devour them, flesh and fell,
Ere they shall make us [illegible]. Shakesp.

The time has been my [illegible]s would have cool'd
To hear a night-shriek; and my fell of hair
Would at a dismal treatise rouse and stir. Shak.

To FELL. v. a. [fellen, Germ.]

1. To knock down; to bring to the ground.

Villain, stand, or I'll fell thee down. Shakesp.

Up and down he traverses his ground;
Now wards a felling blow, now strikes again. Dan.

Taking the small end of his musket in his hand, he struck him on the head with the stock, and felled him. Raleigh.

His fall, for the present, struck an earthquake into all minds; nor could the vulgar be induced to believe he was felled. Howel.

On their whole host I flew
Unarm'd, and with a trivial weapon fell'd
Their choicest youth: they only liv'd who fled. Milton.

2. It seems improperly joined with down or along.

Whom with such force he struck he fell'd him down,
And cleft the circle of his golden crown. Dryden.

I fell'd along a man of bearded face,
His limbs all cover'd with a shining case. Dryden.

3. To hew down; to cut down.

Then would he seem a farmer that would sell
Bargains of woods, which he did lately fell. Hubb.

Proud Arcite and fierce Palamon,
In mortal battle, doubling blow on blow;
Like lightning flam'd their faulchions to and fro,
And shot a dreadful gleam; so strong they struck
There seem'd less force requir'd to fell an oak. Dryden

FELL. The preterite of To fall.

None on their feet might stand,
Though standing else as rocks, but down they fell
By thousands, angel on archangel roll'd. Milton.

FE'LLER. n. s. [from fell.] One that hews down.

Since thou art laid down, no feller is come up against us. Is. xiv. 8.

For very fellness loud he 'gan to weep. FairyQueen.

FE'LLOE. n. s. [felge, Dan.] The circumference of a wheel; the outward part. It is often written fally or felly.

Out, out, thou strumpet Fortune! all you gods,
In general synod, take away her power;
Break all the spokes and fellies from her wheel,
And bowl the round nave down the hill of heav'n. Shakesp.

Axle-trees, naves, felloes and spokes were all molten. Kings

FE'LLOW. n. s. [quasi to follow, Minshew; from ꝑe faith, and lag bound, Sax. Junius; fallow, Scottish.]

1. A companion; one with whom we consort.

In youth I had twelve fellows like unto myself, but not one of them came to a good end. Ascham.

To be your fellow,
You may deny me: but I'll be your servant,
Whether you will or no. Shakesp. Tempest.

Have we not plighted each our holy oath,
That one should be the common good of both;
One soul should both inspire, and neither prove
His fellow's hindrance in pursuit of love? Dryden.

2. An associate; one united in the same affair.

Each on his fellow for assistance calls;
At length the fatal fabrick mounts the walls. Dryden's Virgil.

3. One of the same kind.

Let partial spirits still aloud complain,
Think themselves injur'd that they cannot reign,
And own no liberty, but where they may
Without controul upon their fellows prey. Waller.

A shepherd had one favourite dog: he fed him with his own hand, and took more care of him than of his fellows. L'Estrange.

4. Equal; peer.

So you are to be hereafter fellows, and no longer servants. Sidney.

Chieftain of the rest
I chose him here: the earth shall him allow;
His fellows late, shall be his subjects now. Fairfax.

5. One thing suited to another; one of a pair.

When virtue is lodged in a body, that seems to have been prepared for the reception of vice; the soul and the body do not seem to be fellows. Addison's Spectator.

6. One like or equal to another; as, this knave hath not his fellow.

7. A familiar appellation used sometimes with fondness; sometimes with esteem; but generally with some degree of contempt.

This is Othello's ancient, as I take it.
—The same indeed; a very valiant fellow. Shakesp.

An officer was in danger to have lost his place, but his wife made his peace; whereupon a pleasant fellow said, that he had been crushed, but that he saved himself upon his horns. Bacon.

Full fifteen thousand lusty fellows
With fire and sword the fort maintain;
Each was a Hercules, you tell us,
Yet out they march'd like common men. Prior.

8. A word of contempt: the foolish mortal; the mean wretch; the sorry rascal.

Those great fellows scornfully receiving them, as foolish birds fallen into their net, it pleased the eternal Justice to make them suffer death by their hands. Sidney.

Cassio hath here been set on in the dark
By Rodorigo, and fellows that are 'scap'd. Shakesp.

I have great comfort from this fellow: methinks he hath no drowning mark about him; his complexion is perfect gallows. Shakesp. Tempest.

Opinion, that did help me to the crown,
Had still kept loyal to possession;
And let me in repuleless banishment,
A fellow of no mark or likelihood. Shakesp.

How oft the sight of means, to do ill deeds,
Makes deeds ill done? for had'st thou not been by,
A fellow by the hand of nature mark'd,
Quoted, and sign'd to do a deed of shame,
This murder had not come into my mind. Shakesp.

The Moor's abus'd bysome most villainous knave,
Some base notorious knave, some scurvy fellow! Shakesp.

The fellow had taken more fish than he could spend while they were sweet. L'Estrange.

As next of kin, Achilles' arms I claim;
This fellow would ingraft a foreign name
Upon our stock, and the Sisyphian seed
By fraud and theft asserts his father's breed. Dryd.

You will wonder how such an ordinary fellow, as this Mr. Wood, could have got his Majesty's broad seal. Swift.

You'll find, if once the monarch acts the monk,
Or, cobler-like, the parson will be drunk,
Worth makes the man, and want of it the fellow;
The rest is all but leather and prunella. Pope.

9. Sometimes it implies a mixture of pity with contempt.

The provost commanded his men to hang him up on the nearest tree: then the fellow cried out that he was not the miller, but the miller's man. Hayward.

10. A member of a college that shares its revenues, or of any incorporated society.

There should be a mission of three of the fellows or brethren of Solomon's house, to give us knowledge of the affairs and state of those countries to which they were designed. Bacon.

To FE'LLOW. v. a. To suit with; to pair with; to match. Fellow is often used in composition to mark community of nature, station, or employment.

Imagination,
With what's unreal, thou co-active art,
And fellow'st nothing. Shakesp.

FELLOW-CO'MMONER. n. s.

1. One who has the same right of common.

He cannot appropriate, he cannot inclose, without the consent of all his fellow-commoners, all mankind. Locke.

2. A commoner at Cambridge of the higher order, who dines with the fellows.

FELLOW-CREATURE. n. s. One that has the same creator.

Reason is the glory of human nature, and one of the chief eminencies whereby we are raised above our fellow-creatures, the brutes, in this lower world. Watts's Logick, Introduction.

FE'LLOW-HEIR. n. s. Coheir; partner of the same inheritance.

The Gentiles should be fellow-heirs. Eph. iii. 6.

FELLOW-HE'LPER. n. s. Coadjutor; one who concurs in the same business.

We ought to receive such, that we might be fellow-helpers to the truth. 3 John, 8.

FELLOW-LA'BOURER. n. s. One who labours in the same design.

My fellow-labourers have commissioned me to perform in their behalf this office of dedication. Dryden's Juvenal, Ded.

FELLOW-SERVANT. n. s. One that has the same master.

Nor less think we in heav'n of thee on earth,
Than of our fellow-servant; and inquire
Gladly into the ways of God with man. Milton.

Fair fellow-servant! may your gentle ear
Prove more propitious to my slighted care
Than the bright dames we serve. Waller.

Their fathers and yours were fellow-servants to the same heavenly master while they lived; nor is that relation dissolved by their death, but ought still to operate among their surviving children. Atterbury.

FELLOW-SO'LDIER. n. s. One who fights under the same commander. An endearing appellation used by officers to their men.

Come, fellow-soldier, make thou proclamation. Shakesp.

Epaphroditus, my brother and companion in labour, and fellow-soldier. Phil. ii. 25.

FELLOW-STUDENT. n. s. One who studies in company with another, in the same class, under the same master.

I pry'thee, do not mock me, fellow-student. Shakesp. Hamlet.

If you have no fellow-student at hand, tell it over with your acquaintance. Watts's Logick.

FELLOW-SUBJECT. n. s. One who lives under the same government.

The bleeding condition of their fellow-subjects was a feather in the balance with their private ends. Swift

FELLOW-SUFFERER. n. s. One who shares in the same evils; one who partakes the same sufferings with another.

How happy was it for those poor creatures, that your grace was made their fellow-sufferer? And how glorious for you, that you chose to want rather than not relieve? Dryden.

We in some measure share the necessities of the poor at the same time that we relieve them, and make ourselves not only their patrons but fellow-sufferers. Addison's spectator.

FELLOW-WRITER. n. s. One who writes at the same time, or on the same subject.

Since they cannot raise themselves to the reputation of their fellow-writers, they must sink it to their own pitch, if they would keep themselves upon a level with them. Addison.

FELLOW-FEE'LING. n. s. [fellow and feeling.]

1. Sympathy.

It is a high degree of inhumanity not to have a fellow-feeling of the misfortune of my brother. L'Estrange.

2. Combination; joint interest: commonly in an ill sense.

Even your milkwoman and your nurserymaid have a fellow-feeling. Arbuthnot.

FE'LLOW-LIKE. } adj. [fellow and like.]
FE'LLOWLY. }

Like a companion; on equal terms; companionable.

All which good parts he graceth with a good fellowlike, kind, and respectful carriage. Carew

One seed for another to make an exchange,
With fellowly neighbourhood seemeth not strange. Tusser.

FE'LLOWSHIP. n. s. [from fellow.]

1. Companionship; consort; society.

This boy cannot tell what he would have,
But kneels and holds up hands for fellowship. Shak.

From blissful bow'rs
Of amarantine shade, fountain, or spring,
By th' waters of life, where'er they sat
In fellowships of joys, the sons of light
Hasted. Milton's Par. Lost.

There is no man but God puts excellent things into his possession, to be used for the common good; for men are made for society and mutual fellowship. Calamy's Sermons.

God having designed man for a sociable creature, made him not only with an inclination, and under the necessity to have fellowship with those of his own kind, but furnished him also with language, which was to be the great instrument and cementer of society. Locke.

2. Association; confederacy; combination.

We would not die in that man's company,
That fears his fellowship to die with us. Shakesp.

Those laws do bind men absolutely, even as they are men, although they have never any settled fellowship, never any solemn agreement among themselves. Hooker.

Most of the other Christian princes were drawn into the fellowship of that war. Knolles.

3. Equality.

4. Partnership; joint interest.

Nearer acquainted, now I feel by proof
That fellowship in pain divides not smart,
Nor lightens aught each man's peculiar load. Paradise Regained.

O love! thou sternly dost thy power maintain,
And will not bear a rival in they reign;
Tyrants and thou all fellowship disdain. Dryden.

5. Company; state of being together.

The great contention of the sea and skies
Parted our fellowship. But hark, a sail! Shakesp.

6. Frequency of intercourse; social pleasure.

In a great town friends are scattered, so that there is not that fellowship which is in less neighbourhoods. Bacon's Essays

7. Fitness and fondness for festal entertainments, with good prefixed.

He had by his excessive good fellowship, which was grateful to all the company, made himself popular with all the officers of the army. Clarendon.

8. An establishment in the college, with share in its revenue.

Crusoe having, by extreme parsimony, saved thirty pounds out of a beggarly fellowship, went to London. Swift.

9. [In arithmetick.] That rule of plural proportion whereby we balance accounts, depending between divers persons, having put together a general stock, so that they may every man have his proportional gain, or sustain his proportional part of loss. Cocker.

FE'LLY. adv. [from fell.] Cruelly; inhumanly; savagely; barbarously.

Fair ye be sure, but cruel and unkind;
As is a tyger, that with greediness
Hunts after blood, when he by chance doth find
A feeble beast doth felly him oppress. Spenser.

FELO-DE-SE. n. s. [In law.] He that committeth felony by murdering himself.

FE'LON. n. s. [felon, Fr. felo, low Lat. ꝼel, Sax.]

1. One who has committed a capital crime.
   I apprehend thee for a felon here. Shakesp.
   The wily fox,
   Chas'd even amid' the folds; and made to bleed,
   Like felons, where they did the murd'rous deed. Dryden.

2. A whitlow; a tumour formed between the bone and its investing membrane, very painful.
   The malign paronychia is that which is commonly called a felon. Wiseman's Surgery.

FE'LON. adj. Cruel; traitorous; inhuman.
   Ay me! what thing on earth, that all things breeds,
   Might be the cause of so impatient plight!
   What fury, or what fiend with felon deeds,
   Hath stirred up so mischievous despight! Spenser.
   Then bids prepare th' hospitable treat,
   Vain shews of love to veil his felon hate. Pope.

FELO'NIOUS. adj. [from felon.] Wicked; traitorous; villanous; malignant; perfidious; destructive.
   This man conceived the duke's death; but what was the motive of that felonious conception is in the clouds. Wotton.
   O thievish night!
   Why should'st thou, but for some felonious end,
   In thy dark lanthorn thus close up the stars
   That nature hung in heav'n, and fill'd the lamps
   With everlasting oil, to give due light
   To the misled and lonely traveller? Milton.
   In thy felonious heart though venom lies,
   It does but touch thy Irish pen, and dies. Dryden.

FELO'NIOUSLY. adv. [from felonious.] In a felonious way.

FE'LONOUS. adj. [from felon.] Wicked. Not used.
   I am like for desperate dole to die,
   Through felonous force of mine enemy. Spenser.

FE'LONY. n. s. [felonie, Fr. felonia, low Lat. from felon.] A crime denounced capital by the law; an enormous crime.

FEMALE. n. s. [femelle, Fr. femella, Lat.] A she; one of the sex which brings young; not male.
   God created man in his own image, male and femal created he them. Gen. i. 27.
   If he offer it of the herd, whether it be male or female he shall offer it without blemish. Lev.
   Men, more divine,
   Indu'd with intellectual sense and soul,
   Are masters to their females, and their lords. Shak.

FE'MALE. adj

1. Not male.
   Female of sex it seems. Milton.
   Swarming next appear'd
   The female bee, that feeds her husband drone. Milton.

2. Not masculine; belonging to a she.
   Other suns, perhaps,
   With their attendant moons thou wilt descry,
   Communicating male and female light;
   Which two great sexes animate the world. Milton.
   Add what wants
   In female sex, the more to draw his love. Milton.
   He scrupled not to eat
   Against his better knowledge, not deceiv'd,
   But fondly overcome with female charm. Milton.
   If by a female hand he had foreseen
   He was to die, his wish had rather been
   The lance and double ax of the fair warrior queen. Dryden.

3. Female Rhymes. Double rhymes so called, because in French, from which the term is taken, they end in e weak or feminine. These rhymes are female:
   Th' excess of heat is but a fable;
   We know the torrid zone is now found habitable. Cowley.
   The female rhymes are in use with the Italian in every line, with the Spaniard promiscuously, and with the French alternately, as appears from the Alarique, the Pucelle, or any of their later poems. Dryden's Pref. to Ann. Mirab.

FEME Covert. n. s. [Fr.] A married woman; who is also said to be under covert baron. Blount.

FEME Sole. n. s. [Fr.] A single woman; an unmarried woman.

FEMINA'LITY. n. s. [from fœmina, Lat.] Female nature.
   If in the minority of natural vigour the parts of feminality take place, upon the increase or growth thereof the masculine appears. Brown.

FE'MININE. adj. [fœmininus, Lat.]

1. Of the sex that brings young; female.
   Thus we chastise the god of wine
   With water that is feminine,
   Until the cooler nymph abate
   His wrath, and so concorporate. Cleaveland.

2. Soft; tender; delicate.
   Her heav'nly form
   Angelick, but more soft and feminine. Milton.

3. Effeminate; emasculated; wanting manliness.
   Ninias was no man of war at all, but altogether feminine, and subjected to ease and delicacy. Raleigh's History.

FE'MININE. n. s. A she; one of the sex that brings young; a female.
   O! why did God create at last
   This novelty on earth, this fair defect
   Of nature? And not fill the world at once
   With men, as angels, without feminine? Milton.

FE'MORAL. adj. [femoralis, Lat.] Belonging to the thigh.
   The largest crooked needle should be used in taking up the femoral arteries in amputation. Sharp.

FEN. n. s. [ꝼenn, Sax. venne, Dut.] A marsh; low flat and moist ground; a moor; a bog.
   Mexico is a city that stands in the midst of a great marsh or fen. Abbot's Descrip. of the World.
   I go alone,
   Like to a lonely dragon, that his fen
   Makes fear'd and talk'd of more than seen. Shakesp.
   The surface is of black fen earth. Woodward.
   He to Portina's wat'ry marshes went;
   A long canal the muddy fen divides,
   And with a clear unsully'd current glides. Addison.

FE'NBERRY. n. s. [fen and berry] A kind of blackberry. Skinner.

FENCE. n. s. [from defence.]

1. Guard; security; outwork; defence.
   That proved not fence enough to the reputation of their oppressors. Decay of Piety.
   There's no fence against inundations, earthquakes, or hurricanes. L'Estrange.
   To put them out of their parents view, at a great distance, is to expose them to the greatest dangers of their whole life, when they have the least fence and guard against them. Locke.
   Let us bear this awful corpse to Cæsar,
   And lay it in his sight, that it may stand
   A fence betwixt us and the victor's wrath. Addison

2. Inclosure; mound; hedge; fortified boundary.
   In vain did nature's wise command
   Divide the waters from the land,
   If daring ships, and men profane,
   Invade th' inviolable main;
   Th' eternal fences overleap,
   And pass at will the boundless deep. Dryden.
   Shall I mention make
   Of the vast mound that binds the Lucrine lake?
   Or the disdainful sea, that, shut from thence,
   Roars round the structure, and invades the fence? Dryden.
   Employ their wiles and unavailing care,
   To pass the fences and surprise the fair. Pope.

3. The art of fencing; defence.
   I bruised my skin th' other day, with playing at sword and dagger with a master of fence. Shakesp.

4. Skill in defence.
   I'll prove it on his body, if he dare,
   Despite his nice fence and his active practice. Shakesp.

To FENCE. v. a.

1. To inclose; to secure by an inclosure or hedge.
   Th' inhabitants each pasture and each plain
   Destroyed have, each field to waste is laid;
   In fenced towers bestowed is their grain,
   Before thou cam'st this kingdom to invade. Fairfax.
   He hath fenced up my way that I cannot pass, and set darkness in my paths. Job, xix. 8.
   Thou hast clothed me with skin and flesh, and hast fenced me with bones and sinews. Job, x. 11.
   He went about to make a bridge to a strong city, which was fenced about with walls. 2 Mac. xii. 13.
   See that the churchyard be fenced in with a decent rail or other inclosure. Ayliffe's Parergon.

2. To guard; to fortify.
   So much of adders wisdom I have learnt,
   To fence my ear against thy sorceries. Milton.
   With love to friend, th' impatient lover went,
   Fenc'd from the thorns, and trod the deep descent. Dryden.

To FENCE. v. n.

1. To practise the arts of manual defence; to practise the use of weapons.
   He having got some iron, should have it beaten into swords, and put into his servants hands to fence with, and bang one another. Locke.

2. To guard against; to act on the defensive.
   Vice is the more stubborn as well as the more dangerous evil, and therefore in the first place to be fenced against. Locke.

3. To fight according to art, by obviating blows as well as giving.
   If a throstle sing, he falls straight a capering:
   He will fence with his own shadow. Shakesp.
   A beauteous heifer in the wood is bred;
   The stooping warriors aiming head to head,
   Engage their clashing horns; with dreadful sound
   The forest rattles, and the rocks rebound;
   They fence and push, and, pushing, loudly roar,
   Their dewlaps and their sides are bath'd in gore. Dryden.
   A man that cannot fence will keep out of bullies and gamesters company. Locke.

These, being polemical arts, could no more be learned alone than fencing or cudgelplaying. Arbuthnot and Pope.

FE'NCELESS. adj. [from fence.] Without inclosure; open.

Each motion of the heart rises to fury,
And love in their weak bosoms is a rage
As terrible as hate, and as destructive:
So the wind roars o'er the wide fenceless ocean,
And heaves the billows of the boiling deep,
Alike from North, from South. Rowe's Jane Shore.

FE'NCER. n. s. [from fence.] One who teaches or practises the use of weapons, or science of defence.

Calmness is great advantage; he that lets
Another chafe, may warm him at his fire,
Mark all his wand'rings, and enjoy his frets;
As cunning fencers suffer heat to tire. Herbert.

A nimble fencer will put in a thrust so quick, that the foil will be in your bosom when you thought it a yard off. Digby.

FE'NCIBLE. adj. [from fence.] Capable of defence. Addison.

FE'NCINGMASTER. n. s. [fence and master.] One who teaches the science of defence, or the use of weapons.

FE'NCINGSCHOOL. n. s. [fence and school.] A place in which the use of weapons is taught.

If a man be to prepare his son for duels, I had rather mine should be a good wrestler than an ordinary fencer, which is the most a gentleman can attain to, unless he will be constantly in the fencingschool, and every day exercising. Locke

FEN-CRICKET. n. s. [grillotalpa.] An insect that digs itself holes in the ground.

To* FEND. v. a. [from defend.] To keep off; to shut out.

Spread with straw the bedding of thy fold,
With fern beneath to fend the bitter cold. Dryden

To* FEND. v. n. To dispute; to shift off a charge.

The dexterous management of terms, and being able to fend and prove with them, passes for a great part of learning: but it is learning distinct from knowledge. Locke.

FE'NDER. n. s. [from fend.]

1. An iron plate laid before the fire to hinder coals that fall from rolling forward to the floor.
2. Any thing laid or hung at the side of a ship to keep off violence.

FENERA'TION. n. s. [fœneratio, Lat.] Usury; the gain of interest; the practice of increasing money by lending.

The hare figured not only pusillanimity and timidity from its temper, but fœneration and usury from its fecundity and superfetation. Brown

FE'NUGREEK. n. s. [fœnum Græcum, Lat.] A plant.

FE'NNEL. n. s. [fœniculum, Lat.] A plant of strong scent.

A sav'ry odour blown, more pleas'd my sense
Than smell of sweetest fennel, or the teats
Of ewe, or goat, dropping with milk at ev'n. Milton.

FE'NNELFLOWER. n. s. [nigella.] A plant.

FE'NNELGIANT. n. s. [ferula.] A plant.

FE'NNY. adj. [from fen.]

1. Marshy; boggy; moorish.

Driving in of piles is used for stone or brick houses, and that only where the ground proves fenny or moorish. Moxon.

The hungry crocodile, and hissing snake,
Lurk in the troubl'd stream and fenny brake. Prior.

2. Inhabiting the marsh.

Fillet of a fenny snake,
In the cauldron boil and bake. Shakesp.

FE'NNYSTONES. n. s. A plant.

FE'NSUCKED. adj. [fen and suck.] Sucked out of marshes.

Infect her beauty,
You fensuck'd fogs, drawn by the powerful sun. Shakesp. King Lear.

FE'ODAL. adj. [feodal, Fr. from feod.] Held from another.

FE'ODARY. n. s. [from feodum, Lat.] One who holds his estate under the tenure of suit and service to a superiour lord. Hanmer.

To* FEOFF. v. a. [fief, fieffer, Fr. feoffare, low Lat.] To put in possession; to invest with right.

FEOFFE'E. n. s. [feoffatus, Lat. fieffé, Fr.] One put in possession.

The late earl of Desmond, before his breaking forth into rebellion, conveyed secretly all his lands to feoffees in trust, in hope to have cut off her majesty from the escheat of his lands. Spenser.

FE'OFFER. n. s. [feoffator, low Lat.] One who gives possession of any thing. See FEOFFMENT.

FE'OFFMENT. n. s. [feoffamentum, Lat.] The act of granting possession.

Any gift or grant of any honours, castles, lands, or other immoveable things, to another in fee simple, that is, to him and his heirs for ever, by the delivery of seisin of the thing given: when it is in writing, it is called a deed of feoffment; and in every feoffment the giver is called the feoffer, feoffator, and he that receiveth by virtue thereof the feoffee, feoffatus. The proper difference between a feoffer and a donor is, that the feoffer gives in fee-simple, the donor in fee-tail. Cowell.

FERA'CITY. n. s. [feracitas, Lat.] Fruitfulness; fertility. Dict.

FE'RAL. adj. [feralis, Lat.] Funereal; deadly. Dict.

FERIA'TION. n. s. [feriatio, Lat.] The act of keeping holiday; cessation from work.

As though there were any feriation in nature, this season is commonly termed the physicians vacation. Brown.

FE'RINE. adj. [ferinus, Lat.] Wild; savage.

The only difficulty is touching those ferine, noxious, and untameable beasts; as, lions, tygers, wolves, bears. Hale.

FERI'NENESS. n. s. [from ferine.] Barbarity; savageness; wildness.

A ferine and necessitous kind of life, a conversation with those that were fallen into a barbarous habit of life, would assimilate the next generation to barbarism and ferineness. Hale.

FE'RITY. n. s. [feritas, Lat.] Barbarity; cruelty; wildness; savageness.

He reduced him from the most abject and stupid ferity to his senses, and to sober reason. Woodward's Natural History.

To* FERME'NT. v. a. [fermento, Lat. fermenter, Fr.] To exalt or rarify by intestine motion of parts.

Ye vig'rous swains! while youth ferments your blood,
And purer spirits swell the sprightly flood,
Now range the hills, the thickest woods beset,
Wind the shrill horn, or spread the waving net. Pope.

To* FERMENT. v. n. To have the parts put into intestine motion.

FE'RMENT. n. s. [ferment, Fr. fermentum, Lat.]

1. That which causes intestine motion.

The semen puts females into a fever upon impregnation; and all animal humours which poison, are putrefying ferments. Floyer.

2. Intestine motion; tumult.

Subdue and cool the ferment of desire. Rogers.

FERME'NTABLE. adj. [from ferment.] Capable of fermentation.

FERME'NTAL. adj. [from ferment.] Having the power to cause fermentation. Not used.

Cucumbers, being waterish, fill the veins with crude and windy serosities, that contain little salt or spirit, and debilitate the vital acidity and fermental faculty of the stomach. Brown.

FERMENTA'TION. n. s. [fermentatio, Lat.] A slow motion of the intestine particles of a mixt body, arising usually from the operation of some active acid matter, which rarifies, exalts, and subtilizes the soft and sulphureous particles; as when leaven or yeast rarifies, lightens, and ferments bread or wort. And this motion differs much from that usually called ebullition or effervescence, which is a violent boiling and struggling between an acid and an alkali, when mixed together. Harris.

The juice of grapes, after fermentation, will yield a spiritus ardens. Boyle

A man, by tumbling his thoughts, and forming them into expressions, gives them a new kind of fermentation; which works them into a finer body, and makes them much clearer than they were before. Collier on Friendship

The sap, in fluent dance,
And lively fermentation, mounting, spreads
All this innumerous colour'd scene of things.
Thomson

Her blood all fever'd, with a furious leap,
She sprung from bed distracted in her mind. Dryd.

FE'VERET. n. s. [from fever.] A slight fever; febricula.

A light feveret, or an old quartan ague, is not a sufficient excuse for non-appearance. Ayliffe.

FE'VERFEW. n. s. [febris and fugo, Lat.] A plant.

Common feverfew is the sort used in medicine, and is found wild in many parts of England. Miller.

FE'VERISH. adj. [from fever.]

1. Diseased with a fever.

To other climates beasts and birds retire,
And feverish nature burns in her own fire. Creech.
When an animal that gives suck turns feverish, that is, its juices more alkaline, the milk turns from its native genuine whiteness to yellow. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. Tending to fever.

A feverish disorder disabled me. Swift to Pope.

3. Uncertain; inconstant; now hot, now cold.

We toss and turn about our feverish will,
When all our ease must come by lying still;
For all the happiness mankind can gain,
Is not in pleasure, but in rest from pain. Dryden.

4. Hot; burning.

And now four days the sun had seen our woes,
Four nights the moon beheld th' incessant fire;
It seem'd as if the stars more sickly rose,
And farther from the feverish North retire. Dryd.

FE'VERISHNESS. n. s. [from feverish.] A slight disorder of the feverish kind.

FE'VEROUS. adj. [fievreux-se, Fr. from fever.]

1. Troubled with a fever or ague.

Thou mad'st thine enemies shake, as if the world
Were feverous, and did tremble. Shakesp. Coriol.

2. Having the nature of a fever.

All fev'rous kinds,
Convulsions, epilepsies, fierce catarrhs. Milton.

3. Having a tendency to produce fevers.

It hath been noted by the ancients, that southern winds, blowing much, without rain, do cause a feverous disposition of the year; but with rain not. Bacon's Nat. History.

FE'VERY. adj. [from fever.] Diseased with a fever.

O Rome, thy head
Is drown'd in sleep, and all thy body fev'ry.
Ben Jonson's Catiline

FEUILLAGE. n. s. [Fr.] A bunch or row of leaves.

Of Homer's head I inclose the outline, that you may determine whether you would have it so large, or reduced to make room for feuillage or laurel round the oval. Jervas to Pope.

FEUILLEMORT. n. s. [Fr.] The colour of a faded leaf, corrupted commonly to philemot.

FE'UTERER. n. s. A dogkeeper: perhaps the cleaner of the kennel.

FEW. adj. [ꝑeo, ꝑeopa, Sax. fua, Dan.]

1. Not many; not in a great number.

We are left but few of many. Jer.
So much the thirst of honour fires the blood;
So many would be great, so few be good;
For who would virtue for herself regard,
Or wed without the portion of reward? Dryden.
On Winter seas we fewer storms behold,
Than foul diseases that infect the fold. Dryden.
Men have fewer or more simple ideas from without, according as the objects they converse with afford greater or less variety. Locke.
The fewer still you name, you wound the more;
Bond is but one, but Harpax is a score. Pope.
Party is the madness of many, for the gain of a few. Swift.
The imagination of a poet is a thing so nice and delicate, that it is no easy matter to find out images capable of giving pleasure to one of the few, who, in any age, have come up to that character. Berkley to Pope.

2. Sometimes elliptically; not many words.

To answer both allegations at once, the very substance of that they contain is in few but this. Hooker.
So having said, he thus to Eve in few:
Say, woman, what is this which thou hast done? Milton.
Thus Jupiter in few unfolds the charge. Dryden.
The firm resolve I here in few disclose. Pope.

FE'WEL. n. s. [feu, Fr.] Combustible matter; materials for keeping fire: as firewood, coal.

If a spark of error have thus far prevailed, falling even where the wood was green, and farthest off from any inclination unto furious attempts, must not the peril thereof be greater in men, whose minds are as dry fewel, apt beforehand unto tumults, seditions and broils? Hooker, Dedication.
Others may give the fewel or the fire;
But they the breath, that makes the flame, inspire. Denham.
A known quantity of fewel, all kindled at once, will cause water to boil, which being lighted gradually will never be able to do it. Bentley's Serm.

To FE'WEL. v. a. [from the noun.] To feed with fewel.

Never, alas! the dreadful name,
That fewels the infernal flame. Cowley.

FE'WNESS. n. s. [from few.]

1. Paucity; smallness of number.

These, by reason of their fewness, I could not distinguish from the numbers with whom they are embodied. Dryden.

2. Paucity of words; brevity; conciseness.

Fewness and truth, 'tis thus. Shakesp.

To FEY. v. a. [veghen, Dut.] To cleanse a ditch of mud.

Such muddy deep ditches and pits in the field,
That all a dry Summer no water will yield,
By feying and casting that mud upon heaps,
Commodities many the husbandman reaps. Tusser.

FIB. n. s. [A cant word among children.] A lie; a falsehood.

Destroy his fib or sophistry; in vain,
The creature's at his dirty work again. Pope.
I so often lie,
Scarce Harvey's self has told more fibs than I. Pope.

To FIB. v. n. [from the noun.] To lie; to tell lies; to speak falsely.

If you have any mark, whereby one may know when you fib, and when you speak truth, you had best tell it me. Arbuthnot.

FI'BBER. n. s. [from fib.] A teller of fibs.

FI'BRE. n. s. [fibre, Fr. fibra, Lat.]

1. A small thread or string; the first constituent parts of bodies.

Now sliding streams the thirsty plants renew,
And feed their fibres with reviving dew. Pope.

2. A fibre, in physick, is an animal thread, of which some are soft, flexible, and a little elastick; and these are either hollow, like small pipes, or spongious and full of little cells, as the nervous and fleshy fibres: others are more solid, flexible, and with a strong elasticity or spring, as the membraneous and cartilaginous fibres: and a third sort are hard and flexible, as the fibres of the bones. Some so very small as not to be easily perceived; and others so big as to be plainly seen; and most of them appear to be composed of still smaller fibres: these fibres first constitute the substance of the bones, cartilages, ligaments, membranes, nerves, veins, arteries, and muscles. Quincy.

My heart sinks in me while I hear him speak,
And every slacken'd fibre drops its hold,
Like nature letting down the springs of life:
The name of father awes me still. Dryden.

FI'BRIL. n. s. [fibrille, Fr.] A small fibre or string.

The muscles consist of a number of fibres, and each fibre of an incredible number of little fibrils bound together, and divided into little cells. Cheyne's Phil. Princ.

FI'BROUS. adj. [fibreux, Fr. from fibre.] Composed of fibres or stamina.

The difference between bodies fibrous and bodies viscous is plain; for all wool and tow, and cotton and silk, have a greediness of moisture. Bacon.

I saw Petreus' arms employ'd around
A well-grown oak, to root it from the ground;
This way and that he wrench'd the fibrous bands,
The trunk was like a sapling in his hands. Dryden.

The fibrous and solid parts of plants pass unaltered through the intestines. Arbuthnot on Alim.

FIBULA. n. s. [Lat.] The outer and lesser bone of the leg, much smaller than the tibia: it lies on the outside of the leg; and its upper end, which is not so high as the knee, receives the lateral knob of the upper end of the tibia into a small sinus, which it has in its inner side. Its lower end is received into the small sinus of the tibia, and then it extends into a large process, which forms the outer ankle. Quincy.

FI'CKLE. adj. [ꝼicol, Sax.]

1. Changeable; inconstant; irresolute; wavering; unsteady; mutable; changeful; without steady adherence.

Remember where we are,
In France amongst a fickle wavering nation. Shak.
A slave, whose easy borrow'd pride
Dwells in the fickle grace of her he follows. Shak.
Or likest hovering dreams,
The fickle pensioners of Morpheus' train. Milton.
They know how fickle common lovers are;
Their oaths and vows are cautiously believ'd;
For few there are but have been once deceiv'd.
Dryden.
We in vain the fickle sex pursue,
Who change the constant lover for the new. Prior.

2. Not fixed; subject to vicissitude.

He would be loth
Us to abolish; lest the adversary
Triumph, and say, fickle their state, whom God
Most favours! Milton's Par. Lost.

FI'CKLENESS. n. s. [from fickle] Inconstancy; uncertainty; unsteadiness.

Neither her great worthiness, nor his own suffering for her, could fetter his fickleness; but, before his marriage-day, he had taken to wife that Baccha of whom she complained. Sidney.

Beware of fraud, beware of fickleness,
In choice and change of thy dear-loved dame.
Fairy Queen.

I am a soldier, and unapt to weep,
Or to exclaim on fortune's fickleness. Shakesp.

Instability of temper ought to be checked, when it disposes men to wander from one scheme of government to another, since such a fickleness cannot but be attended with fatal consequences. Addison.

Whether out of fickleness or design I can't tell, I found that what she liked one day she disliked another. Addison.

FI'CKLY. adv. [from fickle.] Without certainty or stability.

Do not now,
Like a young wasteful heir, mortgage the hopes
Of godlike majesty on bankrupt terms,
To raise a present pow'r that's fickly held
By the frail tenure of the people's will. Southern.

FI'CO. n. s. [Ital.] An act of contempt done with the fingers, expressing a fig for you.

Having once recovered his fortress, he then gives the fico to his adversaries. Carew.

FI'CTILE, adj. [fictilis, Lat.] Moulded into form; manufactured by the potter.

The cause of fragility is an impotency to be extended; and therefore stone is more fragil than metal, and so fictile earth is more fragil than crude earth. Bacon's Nat. History.

FI'CTION. n. s. [fictio, Lat. fiction, Fr.]

1. The act of feigning or inventing.

If the presence of God in the image, by a mere fiction of the mind, be a sufficient ground to worship that image, is not God's real presence in every creature a far better ground to worship it? Stillingfl.

Fiction is of the essence of poetry, as well as of painting: there is a resemblance in one of human bodies, things, and actions, which are not real; and in the other of a true story by a fiction. Dryd.

2. The thing feigned or invented.

If through mine ears pierce any consolations,
By wise discourse, sweet tunes, or poets fictions;
If ought I cease these hideous exclamations,
While that my soul, she lives in afflictions. Sidney.

So also was the fiction of those golden apples kept by a dragon, taken from the serpent, which tempted Evah. Raleigh.

3. A falsehood; a lye.

FI'CTIOUS. adj. [fictus, Lat.] Fictitious; imaginary; invented. A word coined by Prior.

With fancy'd rules and arbitrary laws
Matter and motion man restrains,
And study'd lines and fictious circles draws. Prior.

FICTI'TIOUS. adj. [fictitius, Lat.]

1. Counterfeit; false; not genuine.

Draw him strictly so,
That all who view the piece may know,
He needs no trappings of fictitious fame. Dryden.

2. Feigned; imaginary.

The human persons are as fictitious as the airy ones; and Belinda resembles you in nothing but in beauty. Pope.

3. Not real; not true; allegorical; made by prosopopœia.

Milton, sensible of this defect in the subject of his poem, brought into it two characters of a shadowy and fictitious nature in the persons of sin and death, by which means he has interwoven in his fable a very beautiful allegory. Addis. Spectator.

FICTI'TIOUSLY. adv. [from fictitious.] Falsely; counterfeitly.

These pieces are fictitiously set down, and have no copy in nature. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

FID. n. s. [fitta, Ital.] A pointed iron with which seamen untwist their cords. Skinner.

FI'DDLE. n. s. [ꝼibele, Sax. vedel, Dut. fidel, Germ. fidicula, Lat. fiùll, Erse.] A stringed instrument of musick; a violin.

In trials of musical skill the judges did not crown the fiddle, but the performer. Stillingfleet.

The adventure of the bear and fiddle
Is sung; but breaks off in the middle. Hudibras.

She tried the fiddle all over, by drawing the bow over every part of the strings; but could not, for her heart, find whereabout the tune lay. Addison.

To FI'DDLE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To play upon a fiddle.

Themistocles being desired at a feast to touch a lute, he said he could not fiddle, but he could make a small town a great city. Bacon's Essays.

Others import yet nobler arts from France,
Teach kings to fiddle, and make senates dance. Pope.

2. To trifle; to shift the hands often, and do nothing, like a fellow that plays upon a fiddle.

A cunning fellow observed, that old Lewis had stole away part of the map, and saw him fiddling and turning the map, trying to join the two pieces together. Arbuthnot.

Good cooks cannot abide what they justly call fiddling work, where abundance of time is spent, and little done. Swift.

FI'DDLEFADDLE. n. s. [A cant word.] Trifles.

She said that her grandfather had a horse shot at Edgehill, and their uncle was at the siege of Buda; with abundance of fiddlefaddle of the same nature. Spectator.

FI'DDLEFADDLE. adj. Trifling; giving trouble, or making a bustle about nothing.

She was a troublesome fiddlefaddle old woman, and so ceremonious that there was no bearing of her. Arbuthnot.

FI'DDLER. n. s. [from fiddle.] A musician; one that plays upon the fiddle.

Let no saucy fiddler presume to intrude,
Unless he is sent for to vary our bliss. Ben Jonson.

Nero put the fiddlers to death, for being more skilful in the trade than he was. Taylor.

These will appear such chits in story,
'Twill turn all politicks to jests,
To be repeated like John Dory,
When fiddlers sing at feasts. Dryden.

When miss delights in her spinnet,
A fiddler may a fortune get. Swift.

FI'DDLESTICK. n. s. [fiddle and stick.] The bow and hair which a fiddler draws over the strings of a fiddle.

His grisly beard was long and thick,
With which he strung his fiddlestick. Hudibras.

FI'DDLESTRING. n. s. [fiddle and string.] The string of a fiddle; that which makes the noise.

A fiddlestring, moistened with water, will sink a note in a little time, and consequently must be relaxed or lengthened one-sixteenth. Arbuthnot.

FI'DELITY. n. s. [fidelitas, Lat. fidelité, Fr.]

1. Honesty; veracity.

The church, by her publick reading of the book of God, preached only as a witness; now the principal thing required in a witness is fidelity. Hooker.

2. Faithful adherence.

They mistake credulity for fidelity. Clarke.

To FIDGE. } v. n. [A cant word.] To
To FI'DGET. } move nimbly and irregularly. It implies in Scotland agitation.

Tim, thou'rt the Punch to stir up trouble;
You wriggle, fidge, and make a rout,
Put all your brother puppets out. Swift.

FIDU'CIAL. adj. [fiducia, Lat.] Confident; undoubting.

Faith is cordial, and such as God will accept of, when it affords fiducial reliance on the promises, and obediential submission to the commands. Hammond's Pract. Catech.

FIDU'CIARY. n. s. [fiduciarius, Lat.]

1. One who holds any thing in trust.
2. One who depends on faith without works.

The second obstructive is that of the fiduciary, that faith is the only instrument of his justification; and excludes good works from contributing any thing toward it. Hammond.

FIDU'CIARY. adj.

1. Confident; steady; undoubting; untouched with doubt.

That faith, which is required of us, is then perfect, when it produces in us a fiduciary assent to whatever the Gospel has revealed. Wake.

2. Not to be doubted.

Elaiana can rely no where upon mere love and fiduciary obedience, unless at her own home, where she is exemplarily loyal to herself in a high exact obedience. Howel.

FIEF. n. s. [fief, Fr.] A fee; a manor; a possession held by some tenure of a superiour.

To the next realm she stretch'd her sway,
For painture near adjoining lay,
A plenteous province and alluring prey;
A chamber of dependencies was fram'd,
And the whole fief, in right of poetry, she claim'd.
Dryden.

As they were honoured by great privileges, so their lands were [illegible] nature of fiefs, for which the possessors were obliged to do personal service at sea. Arbuthnot on Coins.

FIELD. n. s. [feld, Sax, feld, Germ. veld, Dut.]

1. Ground not inhabited; not built on.

Live with me, and be my love,
And we will all the pleasure prove,
That hills and vallies, dale and field,
And all the craggy mountains yield. Raleigh.

By the civil law the corpse of persons deceased were buried out of the city in the fields. Ayliffe.

2. Ground not enclosed.

Field lands are not exempted from mildews, nor yet from smut, where it is more than in inclosed lands. Mortimer.

3. Cultivated tract of ground.

Or great Osiris, who first taught the swain
In Pharian fields to sow the golden grain. Pope.

4. The open country: opposed to house or quarters.

Since his majesty went into the field,
I have seen her rise from her bed. Shak. Macbeth.

5. The ground of battle.

When a man is in the field, a moderate skill in fencing rather exposes him to the sword of his enemy, than secures him from it. Locke.

6. A battle; a campaign; the action of an army while it keeps the field.

You maintain several factions;
And whilst a field should be dispatch'd and fought,
You are disputing of your generals. Shakesp.

What though the field be lost,
All is not lost. Milton's Par. Lost.

7. A wide expanse.

The god a clearer space for heav'n design'd;
Where fields of light and liquid ether flow,
Purg'd from the pond'rous dregs of earth below.
Dryden.

Ask of yonder argent fields above,
Why Jove's satellites are less than Jove? Pope.

8. Space; compass; extent.

The ill-natured man gives himself a large field to expatiate in: he exposes failings in human nature. Addison's Spectator.

I should enter upon a field too wide, and too much beaten, if I should display all the advantages of peace. Smalridge

Who can this field of miracles survey,
And not with Galen all in rapture say,
Behold a God, adore him and obey. Blackmore.

9. The ground or blank space on which figures are drawn.

Let the field or ground of the picture be clean, light, and well united with colour. Dryden.

10. [In heraldry.] The surface of a shield.

FI'ELDED. adj. [from field.] Being in field of battle.

Now, Mars, I pr'ythee, make us quick in work;
That we with smoking swords may march from hence,
To help our fielded friends. Shakesp. Coriol.

FIELD-BASIL. n. s. [field and basil.] A plant.

FI'ELDBED. n. s. [field and bed.] A bed contrived to be set up easily in the field.

Romeo, good night; I'll to my truckle bed,
This fieldbed is too cold for me to sleep. Shakesp.

FI'ELDFARE. n. s. [feld and fapan, to wander in the fields; turdus pilaris.] A bird.

Winter birds, as woodcocks and fieldfares, if they come early out of the northern countries, with us shew cold winters. Bacon.

FI'ELDMARSHAL. n. s. [field and marshal.] Commander of an army in the field.

FI'ELDMOUSE. n. s. [field and mouse; nitedula.] A mouse that burrows in banks, and makes her house with various apartments.

The fieldmouse builds her garner under ground. Dryden.

Fieldmice are apt to gnaw their roots, and kill them in hard Winters. Mortimer's Husbandry.

FI'ELDOFFICER. n. s. [field and officer.] An officer whose command in the field extends to a whole regiment: as the colonel, lieutenant-colonel, and major.

FI'ELDPIECE. n. s. [field and piece.] Small cannon used in battles, but not in sieges.

The bassa planting his fieldpieces upon the hills, did from thence grievously annoy the defendants. Knolles.

FIEND. n. s. [feond, fiond, Sax. a foe.]

1. An enemy; the great enemy of mankind; Satan; the devil.

Tom is followed by the [illegible] fiend. Shakesp.

2. Any infernal being.

What now, had I a body again, I could,
Coming from hell; what fiends would wish should be,
And Hannibal could not have wish'd to see.
Ben Jonson's Cat.

The bell-hounds, as ungorg'd with flesh and blood,
Pursue their prey, and seek their wonted food;
The fiend remounts his courser. Dryden.

O woman! woman! when to ill thy mind
Is bent, all hell contains no fouler fiend. Pope.

FIERCE. adj. [fier, Fr. ferox, Lat.]

1. Savage; ravenous; easily enraged.

Thou huntest me as a fierce lion. Job.

2. Vehement in rage; eager of mischief.

The ashes, by their heat, their fieriness, and their dryness, belong to the element of earth. Boyle.

2. Heat of temper; intellectual ardour.

The Italians, notwithstanding their natural fierceness of temper, affect always to appear sober and sedate. Addison.

FI'ERY. adj. [from fire.]

1. Consisting of fire.

Scarcely had Phœbus in the gloomy East
Yet harnessed his fiery footed team,
Ne rear'd above the earth his flaming crest,
When the last deadly smoak aloft did stream.
Fairy Queen.

I know, thou'dst rather
Follow thine enemy in a fiery gulph
Than flatter him in a bower. Shakesp.

2. Hot like fire.

Hath thy fiery heart so parcht thy entrails,
That not a tear can fall for Rutland's death? Shak.

3. Vehement; ardent; active.

Then fiery expedition be my wing,
Jove's Mercury, and herald for a king. Shakesp.
I drew this gallant head of war,
And cull'd these fiery spirits from the world,
To outlook conquest, and to win renown
Ev'n in the jaws of danger and of death. Shak.

4. Passionate; outrageous; easily provoked.

You know the fiery quality of the duke;
How unremoveable, and fixt is he
In his own course. Shak. King Lear.

5. Unrestrained; fierce.

Then, as I said, the duke, great Bolingbroke,
Mounted upon a hot and fiery steed,
Which his aspiring rider seem'd to know,
With slow but stately pace kept on his course.
Shakesp.
Through Elis and the Grecian towns he flew;
Th' audacious wretch for fiery coursers drew. Dryd.

6. Heated by fire.

The sword which is made fiery doth not only cut, by reason of the sharpness which simply it hath, but also burn by means of that heat which it hath from fire. Hooker.
See! from the brake the whirring pheasant springs,
And mounts ulting on triumphant wings:
Short is his joy; he feels the fiery wound,
Flutters in blood, and panting beats the ground.
Pope.

FIFE. n. s. [fifre, Fr.] A pipe blown to the drum; military wind musick.

Farewell the plumed troops, and the big war
That make ambition virtue! oh farewell!
Farewell the neighing steed and the shrill trump,
The spirit-stirring drum, the ear-piercing fife. Shak.
Thus the gay victim, with fresh garlands crown'd,
Pleas'd with the sacred fife's enlivening sound,
Through gazing crowds in solemn state proceeds.
Philips.

FIFTEE'N. adj. [fýftýne, Sax.] Five and ten.

I have dreamed and slept above some fifteen years and more. Shak. Taming of the Shrew.

FIFTEE'NTH. adj. [fiftéoða, Sax.] The ordinal of fifteen; the fifth after the tenth; containing one part in fifteen.

A fifteenth part of silver incorporate with gold, will not be recovered by any water of separation, except you put a greater quantity of silver to draw up the less. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
London sends but four burgesses to parliament, although it bear the fifteenth part of the charge of the whole nation in all publick taxes and levies.
Graunt's Bills of Morality.

FIFTH. adj. [fifta, Sax.]

1. The ordinal of five; the next to the fourth.

With smiling aspect you serenely move,
In your fifth orb, and rule the realm of love. Dryd.
Just as I wish'd the lots were cast on four,
Myself the fifth. Pope's Odyssey.

2. All the ordinals are taken elliptically for the part of which they express; a fifth, a fifth part; a third, a third part.

The publick shall have lost four fifths of its annual income for ever. Swift.

FI'FTHLY. adv. [from fifth.] In the fifth place.

Fifthly, living creatures have a more exact figure than plants. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

FI'FTIETH. adj. [fiftéogoða, Sax.] The ordinal of fifty.

If this medium be rarer within the sun's body than at its surface, and rarer there than at the hundredth part of an inch from its body, and rarer there than at the fiftieth part of an inch from its body, and rarer there than at the orb of Saturn, I see no reason why the increase of density should stop any where. Newton's Opticks.

FI'FTY. adj. [fiftig, Sax.] Five tens.

A wither'd hermit, five score Winters worn,
Might shake off fifty looking in her eye. Shak.
Judas ordained captains over thousands, hundreds, fifties, and tens. 1 Mac. iii. 55.
In the Hebrew there is a particle consisting but of one letter, of which there are reckoned up above fifty several significations. Locke.

FIG. n. s. [ficus, Lat. figo, Span. figue, French.]

1. A tree that bears figs.

The characters are: the flowers, which are always inclosed in the middle of the fruit, consist of the leaf, and are male and female in the same fruit: the male flowers are situated towards the crown of the fruit; and the female, growing near the stalk, are succeeded by small hard seeds: the intire fruit is, for the most part, turbinated and globular, or of an oval shape, is fleshy, and of a sweet taste. Miller.
Full on its crown a fig's green branches rise,
And shoot a leafy forest to the skies. Pope's Odys.
Or lead me through the maze,
Embowering endless of the Indian fig. Thomson.

2. A luscious soft fruit; the fruit of the fig-tree.

It maketh figs better, if a figtree, when it beginneth to put forth leaves, have his top cut off.
Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Figs are great subduers of acrimony. Arbuthnot.

To FIG. v. a. [See FICO.]

1. To contend in battle; to war; to make war; to battle; to contend in arms. It is used both of armies and single combatants.

King Henry, be thy title right or wrong,
Lord Clifford vows to fight in thy defence. Shak.
Fierce fiery warriors fight upon the clouds
In ranks and squadrons, and right form of war.
Shakesp.
The common question is, if we must now surrender Spain, what have we been fighting for all this while? The answer is ready: we have been fighting for the ruin of the publick interest, and the advancement of a private. Swift.
For her confederate nations fought, and kings were slain,
Troy was o'erthrown, and a whole empire fell.
Philips.

2. To combat; to duel; to contend in single fight.

One shall undertake to fight against another.
2 Esdr. xiii.
The poor wren,
The most diminutive of birds, will fight,
The young ones in her nest, against the owl.
Shakesp. Macbeth.

3. To act as a soldier in any case.

Richard, that robb'd the lion of his heart,
And fought the holy wars in Palestine,
By this brave duke came early to his grave.
Shakesp.
Greatly unfortunate, he fights the cause
Of honour, virtue, liberty, and Rome. Addison

4. It has with before the person opposed; sometimes against.

Ye fight with the Chaldeans. Jer.
The stars in their courses fought against Sisera.
Judges.

5. To contend.

The hot and cold, the dry and humid fight.
Sandys

To FIGHT. v. a. To war against; to combat against.

Himself alone an equal match he boasts,
To fight the Phrygian and th' Ausonian hosts.
Dryden's Æneid

FIGHT. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Battle.

Gabriel, lead forth to battle these my sons
Invincible, lead forth my armed saints,
By thousands and by millions rang'd for fight.
Milton.

2. Combat; duel.

Herilus in single fight I slew,
Whom with three lives Feronia did endue;
And thrice I sent him to the Stygian shore,
'Till the last ebbing soul return'd no more. Dryd.

3. Something to screen the combatants in ships.

Who ever saw a noble sight,
That never view'd a brave sea-fight!
Hang up your bloody colours in the air,
Up with your fights and your nettings prepare.
Dryden.

FI'GHTER. n. s. [from fight.] Warriour; duellist.

I will return again into the house, and desire some conduct of the lady: I am no fighter. Shak.
O, 'tis the coldest youth upon a charge,
The most deliberate fighter! Dryd. All for Love.

In fighting fields as far the spear I throw
As flies the arrow from the well-drawn bow. Pope

FI'GMENT. n. s. [figmentum, Lat.] An invitation; a fiction: the idea feigned.

Upon the like grounds was raised the figment of Briareus, who, dwelling in a city called Hecatonchiria, the fancies of those times assigned him an hundred hands. Brown.
Those assertions are in truth the figments of those idle brains that brought romances into church history. Bishop Bilson.
It carried rather an appearance of [illegible] invention, in those [illegible] handed down the memory of it, than of truth and reality. Woodward.

FI'GPECKER. n. s. [fig and pecker; ficedula, Lat.] A bird.

FI'GULATE. adj. [from figulus. Lat.] Made of potters clay.

FI'GURABLE. adj. [from figuro, Lat.] Capable of being brought to certain form, and retained in it. Thus lead is figurable, but not water.
The differences of impressible and not impressible, figurable and not figurable, scissible and not scissible, are plebeian notions. Bacon.

FIGURABI'LITY. n. s. [from figurable.] The quality of being capable of a certain and stable form.

FI'GURAL. adj. [from figure.]

1. Represented by delineation.

Incongruities have been committed by geographers in the figural resemblances of several regions. Brown.

2. Figural Number. Such numbers as do or may represent some geometrical figure, in relation to which they are always considered, and are either lineary, superficial, or solid. Harris.

FI'GURATE. adj. [figuratus, Lat.]

1. Of a certain and determinate form.

Plants are all figurate and determinate, which inanimate bodies are not; for look how far the spirit is able to spread and continue itself, so far goeth the shape or figure, and then is determined. Bacon.

2. Resembling any thing of a determinate form: as, figurate stones retaining the forms of shells in which they were formed by the deluge.

3. Figurate Counterpoint. [In musick.] That wherein there is a mixture of discords along with the concords. Harris.

4. Figurate Descant. [In musick.] That wherein discords are concerned, as well, though not so much, as concords; and may well be termed the ornament or rhetorical part of musick, in regard that in this are introduced all the varieties of points, figures, syncopes, diversities of measures, and whatever else is capable of adorning the composition. Harris.

FIGURA'TION. n. s. [figuratus, Lat.]

1. Determination to a certain form.

Neither doth the wind, as far as it carrieth a voice, with motion thereof confound any of the delicate and articulate figurations of the air in variety of words. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

2. The act of giving a certain form.

If motion be in a certain order, there followeth vivification and figuration in living creatures perfect. Bacon's Nat Hist.

FI'GURATIVE. adj. [figuratif-ve, Fr. from figura, Lat.]

1. Representing something else; typical; representative.

This, they will say, was figurative, and served by God's appointment but for a time, to shadow out the true everlasting glory of a more divine sanctity; whereinto Christ being long since entered, it seemeth that all these curious exornations should rather cease. Hooker.

2. Changed by rhetorical figures from the primitive meaning; not literal.

How often have we been railed at for understanding words in a figurative sense, which cannot [illegible]ally understood without overthrowing the plainest evide[illegible]ense and reason. Stillingfleet.

This is a figurative expression, where the words are used in a different sense from what they signify in their first ordinary intention. Rogers

3. Full of figures; full of rhetorical exornations; full of changes from the original sense.

Sublime subjects ought to be adorned with the sublimest and with the most figurative expressions. Dryden's Juvenal, Pref.

FI'GURATIVELY. adv. [from figurative.] By a figure; in a sense different from that which words originally imply; not literally.

The custom of the apostle is figuratively to transfer to himself, in the first person, what belongs to others. Hammond.

The words are different, but the sense is still the same; for therein are figuratively intended Uziah and Ezechias. Brown.

Satyr is a kind of poetry in which human vices are reprehended, partly dramatically, partly simply; but, for the most part, figuratively and occultly. Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.

FI'GURE. n. s. [figura, Lat.]

1. The form of any thing as terminated by the outline.

Flowers have all exquisite figures, and the flower numbers are chiefly five and four; as in prim-roses, briar-roses, single muskroses, single pinks and gilliflowers, which have five leaves; lilies, flowerdeluces, borage, buglass, which have four leaves. Bacon

Men find green clay that is soft as long as it is in the water, so that one may print on it all kind of figures, and give it what shape one pleases. Boyle.

Figures are properly modifications of bodies; for pure space is not any where terminated, nor can be: whether there be or be not body in it, it is uniformly continued. Locke.

2. Shape; form; semblance.

He hath borne himself beyond the promise of his age, doing in the figure of a lamb the feats of a lion. Shakesp.

3. Person; external form; appearance graceful or inelegant, mean or grand.

The blue German shall the Tigris drink,
Ere I, forsaking gratitude and truth,
Forget the figure of that godlike youth. Dryden.

I was charmed with the gracefulness of his figure and delivery, as well as with his discourses. Addison.

A good figure, or person, in man or woman, gives credit at first sight to the choice of either. Clarissa

4. Distinguished appearance; eminence; remarkable character.

While fortune favour'd while his arms support
The cause, and rul'd the cousels of the court,
I made some figure there; nor was my name
Obscure, nor I without my share of fame. Dryd.

The speech, I believe, was not so much designed by the knight to inform the court, as to give him a figure in my eye, and keep up his credit in the country. Addison's Spectator.

Not a woman shall be unexplained that makes a figure either as a maid, a wife, or a widow. Addison's Guardian.

Whether or no they have done well to set you up for making another kind of figure, time will witness. Addison.

Many princes made very ill figures upon the throne, who before were the favourites of the people. Addison's Freeholder.

5. Magnificence; splendour.

If it be his chief end in it to grow rich, that he may live in figure and indulgence, and be able to retire from business to idleness and hurry, his trade, as to him, loses all its innocency. Law.

6. A statue; an image; something formed in resemblance of somewhat else.

Several statues which seemed at a distance of the whitest marble, were nothing else but so many figures in snow. Addison.

7. Representations in painting; persons exhibited in colours.

In the principal figures of a picture the painter is to employ the sinews of his art; for in them consists the principal beauty of his work. Dryd.

My favourite books and pictures sell;
Kindly throw in a little figure,
And set the price upon the bigger. Prior.

8. Arrangement; disposition; modification.

The figure of a syllogism is the proper disposition of the middle term with the parts of the question. Watts's Logick.

9. A character denoting a number.

Hearts, tongues, figures, scribes, bards, poets cannot Think, speak, cast, write, sing, number
His love to Antony. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleop.

He that seeketh to be eminent amongst able men, hath a great task; but that is ever good for the publick: but he that plotteth to be the only figure among cyphers, is the decay of a whole age. Bac.

As in accounts cyphers and figures pass for real sums, so in human affairs words pass for things themselves. South's Sermons.

10. The horoscope; the diagram of the aspects of the astrological houses.

We do not know what's brought to pass under the profession of fortunetelling; she works by charms, by spells, by the figure, and daubry beyond our element. Shakesp.

He set a figure to discover
If you were fled to Rye or Dover. Hudibras.

Figure-flingers and star-gazers pretend to foretell the fortunes of kingdoms, and have no foresight in what concerns themselves. L'Estrange.

11. [In theology.] Type; representative.

Who was the figure of him that is to come. Rom.

12. [In rhetorick.] Any mode of speaking in which words are detorted from their literal and primitive sense. In strict acceptation, the change of a word is a trope, and any affection of a sentence a figure; but they are confounded even by the exactest writers.

Silken terms precise,
Three pil'd hyperboles, spruce affectation,
Figures pedantical, these Summer flies
Have blown me full of maggot ostentation. Shak.

Here is a strange figure invented against the plain and natural sense of the words; for by praying to bestow, must be understood only praying to pray. Stillingfleet.

They have been taught rhetorick, but never taught language; as if the names of the figures that embellished the discourse of those, who understood the art of speaking, were the very art and skill of speaking well. Locke.

13. [In grammar.] Any deviation from the rules of analogy or syntax.

To FI'GURE. v. a. [from figuro, Lat.]

1. To form into any determinate shape.

Trees and herbs, in the growing forth of their boughs and branches, are not figured, and keep no order. Bacon.

Accept this goblet, rough with figur'd gold. Dryd. Virg.

2. To show by a corporeal resemblance: as in picture or statuary.

Arachne figur'd how Jove did abuse
Europa like a bull, and on his back
Her through the sea did bear; so lively seen,
That it true sea, and true bull ye would ween. Spenser.

Now marks the course of rolling orbs on high,
O'er figur'd world now travels with his eye. Pope.

3. To cover or adorn with figures, or images.

I'll give my jewels for a set of beads,
My gorgeous palace for a hermitage,
My gay apparel for an almsman's gown,
My figur'd goblets for a dish of wood. Shakesp.

4. To diversify; to variegate with adventitious forms or matter.

But this effusion of such manly drops,
Startle mine eyes, and make me more amas'd
Than had I seen the vaulty top of heav'n
Figur'd quite o'er with burning meteors. Shakesp.

5. To represent by a typical or figurative resemblance.

When sacraments are said to be visible signs of invisible grace, we thereby conceive how grace is indeed the very end for which these heavenly mysteries were instituted: and the matter whereof they consist is such as signifieth, figureth, and representeth their end. Hooker.

There is a history in all men's lives,
Figuring the nature of the times deceased. Shak.

Marriage rings are not of this stuff:
Oh! why should ought less precious or less tough

An heroic poem should be more fitted to the common actions and passions of human life, and more like a glass of nature, figuring a more practicable virtue to us than was done by the ancients. Dryd.

The emperor appears as a rising sun, and holds a globe in his hand to figure out the earth that is enlightened and actuated by his beams. Addison.

6. To image in the mind.

None that feels sensibly the decays of age, and his life wearing off, can figure to himself those imaginary charms in riches and praise, that men are apt to do in the warmth of their blood. Temple.

If love, alas! be pain, the pain I bear
No thought can figure, and no tongue declare.
Prior.

7. To prefigure; to foreshow.

Three glorious suns, each one a pefect sun;
In this the heaven figures some event. Shakesp.

8. To form figuratively; to use in a sense not literal.

Figured and metaphorical expressions do well to illustrate more abstruse and unfamiliar ideas, which the mind is not yet thoroughly accustomed to. Locke.

9. To note by characters.

Each thought was visible that roll'd within,
As thro' a crystal glass the figur'd hours are seen.
Dryden.

FI'GURE-FLINGER n. s. [figure and fling.] A pretender to astrology and prediction.

Quacks, figure-flingers, pettifoggers, and republican plotters cannot well live without it. Collier.

FI'GWORT. n. s. [fig and wort; ficaria.] A plant. Miller.

FILA'CEOUS. adj. [from filum, Lat.] Consisting of threads; composed of threads.

They make cables of the bark of lime trees; it is the stalk that maketh the filaceus matter commonly, and sometimes the down that groweth above. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

FI'LACER. n. s. [filazarius, low Lat. filum.] An officer in the Common Pleas, so called because he files those writs whereon he makes process. There are fourteen of them in their several divisions and counties: they make out all original process, as well real as personal and mixt. Harris.

FI'LAMENT. n. s. [filament, Fr. filamenta, Lat.] A slender thread; a body slender and long like a thread.

The effluvium passing out in a smaller thread, and more enlightened filament, it stirreth not the bodies interposed. Brown.

The lungs of consumptives have been consumed, nothing remaining but the ambient membrane, and a number of withered veins and filaments. Harvey.

The ever-rolling orb's impulsive ray
On the next threads and filaments does bear,
Which form the springy texture of the air;
And those still strike the next, 'till to the sight
The quick vibration propagates the light. Blackm.

The dung of horses is nothing but the filaments of the hay, and as such combustible. Arbuthnot.

FI'LBERT. n. s. [This is derived by Junius and Skinner from the long beards or husks, as corrupted from full beard or full of beard. It probably had its name, like many other fruits, from some one that introduced or cultivated it; and is therefore corrupted from Filbert or Filibert, the name of him who brought it hither.] A fine hazel nut with a thin shell.

In August comes fruit of all sorts; as plumbs, pears, apricots, barberries, filberts, muskmelons, monkshoods of all colours. Bacon's Essays.

Thou hast a brain, such as it is indeed!
On what else should thy worm of fancy feed?
Yet in a filbert I have often known
Maggots survive, when all the kernel's gone.
Dorset.

There is also another kind, called the filbert of Constantinople; the leaves and fruit of which are bigger than either of the former; the best are those of a thin shell. Mortimer.

To FILCH. v. a. [A word of uncertain etymology. The French word filer, from which some derive it, is of very late production, and therefore cannot be its original.] To steal; to take by theft; to pilfer; to pillage; to rob; to take by robbery. It is usually spoken of petty thefts.

He shall find his wealth wonderfully enlarged by keeping his cattle in inclosures, where they shall always have safe being, that none are continually filched and stolen. Spenser.

The champion robbeth by night,
And prowleth and filcheth by daie. Tusser's Husb.

Who steals my purse, steals trash; 'tis something, nothing;
'Twas mine, 'tis his, and has been slave to thousands;
But he that filches from me my good name,
Robs me of that which not enriches him,
And makes me poor indeed. Shakesp. Othello.

He could discern cities like hives of bees, wherein every bee did nought else but sting; some like hornets, some like filching wasps, others as drones. Burton on Melancholy.

What made the venture to betray,
And filch the lady's heart away. Hudibras.

The pismire was formerly a husbandman, that secretly filched away his neighbour's goods. L'Est.

Fain would they filch that little food away,
While unrestrain'd those happy gluttons prey. Dry.

So speeds the wily fox, alarm'd by fear,
Who lately filch'd the turkey's callow care. Gay.

FI'LCHER. n. s. [from filch.] A thief; a petty robber.

FILE. n. s. [file, Fr. filum a thread, Lat.]

1. A thread. Not used.

But let me resume the file of my narration, which this object of books, best agreeable to my course of life, hath a little interrupted. Wotton.

2. A line on which papers are strung to keep them in order.

All records, wherein there was any memory of the king's attainder, should be cancelled and taken off the file. Bacon.

The petitions being thus prepared, do you continually set apart an hour in a day to peruse those, and then rank them into several files, according to the subject matters. Bacon.

Th' apothecary-train is wholly blind;
From files a random recipe they take,
And many deaths of one prescription make. Dryd.

3. A catalogue; roll; series.

Our present musters grow upon the file
To five and twenty thousand men of choice. Shak.

The valu'd file
Distinguishes the swift, the slow, the subtle. Shak.

4. A line of soldiers ranged one behind another.

Those goodly eyes,
That o'er the files and musters of the war
Have glow'd like plated Mars, now bend, now turn
Upon a tawny front. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleop.

So saying, on he led his radiant files,
Dazzling the moon. Milton's Par. Lost.

5. [ꝼeol, Sax. vijle, Dut.] An instrument to rub down prominences.

The rough or coarse-toothed file, if it be large, is called a rubber, and is to take off the unevenness of your work which the hammer made in the forging: the bastard-toothed file is to take out of your work the deep cuts, or file-strokes, the rough file made: the fine-toothed file is to take out the cuts, or file-strokes, the bastard file made; and the smooth file is to take out those cuts, or file-strokes, that the fine file made. Moxon.

A file for the mattocks and for the coulters.
1 Sam. xiii. 21.

The smiths and armourers on palfrey s ride,
Files in their hands and hammers at their side. Dry.

FI'LECUTTER. n. s. [file and cutter.] A maker of files.

Gad-steel is a tough sort of steel: filecutters use it to make their chissels, with which they cut their files. Moxon.

To FILE. v. a. [from filum a thread.]

1. To string upon a thread or wire. Whence to file a bill is to offer it in its order to the notice of the judge.

From the day his first bill was filed he began to collect reports. Arbuthnot and Pope's Mart. Scrib.

2. [From ꝼeolan, Sax.] To cut with a file.

They which would file away most from the largeness of that offer, do in more sparing terms acknowledge little less. Hooker

Let men be careful how they attempt to cure a blemish by filing or cutting off the head of such an overgrown tooth. Ray.

3. To smooth; to polish.

His humour is lofty, his discourse peremptory, his tongue filed, and his eye ambitious. Shakesp.

4. [From ꝼilan, Sax.] To foul; to sully; to pollute. This sense is retained in Scotland.

For Banquo's issue have I fil'd my mind,
For them the gracious Duncan have I murder'd.
Shakesp

His weeds divinely fashioned,
All fil'd and mangl'd. Chapman's Iliads.

To FILE. v. n. [from the noun.] To march in a file, not abreast, but one behind another.

All ran down without order or ceremony, 'till we drew up in good order, and filed off. Tatler.

Did all the grosser atoms at the cell
Of chance file off to form the pondrous ball,
And undetermin'd into order fall: Blackmore.

FI'LEMOT. n. s. [corrupted from feueille morte a dead leaf, Fr.] A brown or yellow-brown colour.

The colours you ought to wish for are blue or filemot, turned up with red. Swift.

FI'LER. n. s. [from file.] One who files; one who uses the file in cutting metals.

FI'LIAL. adj. [filial-le, Fr. filius, Lat.]

1. Pertaining to a son; befitting a son.

My mischievous proceeding may be the glory of his filial piety, the only reward now left for so great a merit. Sidney.

From imposition of strict laws, to free
Acceptance of large grace; from servile fear
To filial; works of law, to works of faith. Milton.

He griev'd, he wept, the sight an image brought
Of his own filial love, a sadly pleasing thought.
Dryden.

2. Bearing the character or relation of a son.

And thus the filial godhead answ'ring spoke.

Where the old myrtle [illegible]
Sprigs of like leaf erect their filial heads;
And when the parent rose decays and dies,
With a resembling face the daughter buds arise.
Prior.

FILIA'TION. n. s. [from filius, Lat.] The relation of a son to a father; correlative to paternity.

The relation of paternity and filiation, between the first and second person, and the relation between the sacred persons of the Trinity, and the denomination thereof, must needs be eternal, because the terms of relation between whom that relation ariseth were eternal. Hale's Orig. Mankind.

FI'LINGS. n. s. [without a singular; from file.] Fragments rubbed off by the action of the file.

The filings of iron infused in vinegar, will, with a decoction of galls, make good ink, without any copperose. Brown.

The chippings and filings of those jewels are of more value than the whole mass of ordinary authors. Felton on the Class.

To FILL. v. a [fyllan, Sax.]

1. To store 'till no more can be admitted.

Fill the waterpots with water; and they filled them up to the brim. John, ii. 7.

I am who fill
Infinitude, nor vacuous space. Milton.

The celestial quires, when orient light
Exhaling first from darkness they beheld;
Birth-day of Heav'n and Earth; with joy and shout
The hollow universal orb they fill'd. Milton.

2. To store abundantly.

Be fruitful, multiply, and in the seas
And lakes and running streams the waters fill. Milt.

3. To satisfy; to content.

He with his consorted Eve
The story heard attentive, and was fill'd
With admiration and deep muse to hear. Milton.

Nothing but the supreme and absolute Infinite can adequately fill and superabundantly satisfy the infinite desires of intelligent beings. Cheyne.

4. To glut; to surfeit.

Thou art going to lord Timon's feast.
—Ay, to see meat fill knaves, and wine heat fools. Shakesp.

5. To fill out. To pour out liquor for drink.

6. To fill out. To extend by something contained.

I only speak of him
Whom pomp and greatness sits so loose about,
That he wants majesty to fill them out. Dryden.

7. To fill up. [Up is often used without much addition to the force of the verb.] To make full.

Hope leads from goal to goal,
And opens still, and opens on his soul;
Till lengthen'd on to faith, and unconfin'd,
It pours the bliss that fills up all the mind. Pope.

8. To fill up. To supply.

When the several trades and professions are supplied, you will find most of those that are proper for war absolutely necessary for filling up the laborious part of life, and carrying on the underwork of the nation. Addison on the War.

9. To fill up. To occupy by bulk.

There would not be altogether so much water required for the land as for the sea, to raise them to an equal height; because mountains and hills would fill up part of that space upon the land, and so make less water requisite. Burnet.

10. To fill up. To engage; to employ.

Is it far you ride?
—As far, my lord, as will fill up the time
'Twixt this and supper. Shakesp. Macbeth.

To FILL. v. n.

1. To give to drink.

In the cup which he hath filled, fill to her double. Rev. xviii.

We fill to th' general joy of the whole table,

Now like a chain around her neck he rides;
Now like a fillet to her head repairs,
And with his circling volumes folds her hairs.
Dryd. Æn.

She scorn'd the praise of beauty, and the care;
A belt her waist, a fillet binds her hair. Pope.

2. The fleshy part of the thigh; applied commonly to veal.

The youth approach'd the fire, and as it burn'd,
On five sharp broachers rank'd, the roast they turn'd;
These morsels stay'd their stomachs; then the rest
They cut in legs and fillets for the feast. Dryd.

3. Meat rolled together and tied round.

Fillet of a fenny snake,
In the cauldron boil and bake. Shakesp.

The mixture thus, by chymick art
United close in every part,
In fillets roll'd, or cut in pieces,
Appear'd like one continu'd species. Swift.

Michael from Adam's eyes the film remov'd,
Which that false fruit that promis'd clearer sight
Had bred. Milton's Par. Lost.

A stone is held up by the films of the bladder, and so kept from grating or offending it. Graunt.

There is not one infidel so ridiculous as to pretend to solve the phænomena of sight, fancy, or cogitation, by those fleeting superficial films of bodies. Bentley's Sermons.

He from thick films shall purge the visual ray,
And on the sightless eyeballs pour the day. Pope.

To FILM. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover with a pellicle or thin skin.

It will but skin and film the ulcerous place,
Whilst rank corruption, mining all within,
Infects unseen. Shakesp. Hamlet.

FI'LMY. adj. [from film.] Composed of thin membranes or pellicles.

So the false spider, when her nets are spread,
Deep ambush'd in her silent den does lie;
And feels, far off, the trembling of her thread,
Whose filmy cord should bind the struggling fly.
Dryden.

The wasps with fruitless toil
Flap filmy pinions off, to extricate
Their feet in liquid shackles bound, 'till death
Bereave them of their worthless souls; such doom
Waits luxury, and lawless love of gain. Philips.

Loose to the winds their airy garments flew,
Thin glitt'ring textures of the filmy dew;
Dipt in the richest tincture of the skies,
When light disports in ever-mingling dyes. Pope.

To FI'LTER. v. a. [filtro, low Lat. per filum trahere.]

1. To defecate by drawing off liquor by depending threads.

2. To strain; to percolate.

2. A strainer; a search.

That the water passing through the veins of the earth, should be rendered fresh and potable, which it cannot be by any percolations we can make, but the saline particles will pass through a tenfold filter. Ray on the Creation.

FI'LTH. n. s. [fylð, Sax.]

1. Dirt; nastiness; any thing that soils or fouls.

Wisdom and goodness to the vile seem vile;
Filths favour but themselves. Shakesp. King Lear.

Neither may you trust waters that taste sweet; for they are commonly found in rising grounds of great cities, which must needs take in a great deal of filth. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

How perfect then is man? from head to foot
Defil'd with filth, and rotten at the root. Sandys.
Though perhaps among the rout
He wildly flings his filth about;
He still has gratitude and sap'ence,
To spare the folks that give him ha'pence. Swift.

2. Corruption; grossness; pollution.

Such do likewise exceedingly dispose us to piety and religion, by purifying our souls from the dross and filth of sensual delights. Tillotson.

FI'LTHILY. adv. [from filthy.] Nastily; foully; grossly.

It struck filthily in the camel's stomach that bulls, bears, and the like, should be armed, and that a creature of his size should be left defenceless. L'Estrange.

FI'LTHINESS. n. s. [from filthy.]

1. Nastiness; foulness; dirtiness.

Men of virtue suppressed it, lest their shining should discover the others filthiness. Sidney.

2. Corruption; pollution.

They held this land, and with their filthiness
Polluted this same gentle soil long time,
That their own mother loath'd their beastliness,
And 'gan abhor her brood's unkindly crime,
All were they born of her own native slime. Spen.
They never duly improved the utmost of such a power, but gave themselves up to all the filthiness and licentiousness of life imaginable. South's Serm.

FI'LTHY. adj. [from filth.]

1. Nasty; foul; dirty.

Fair is foul, and foul is fair;
Hover through the fog and filthy air. Shak. Mac.

2. Gross; polluted.

As all stories are not proper subjects for an epick poem or a tragedy, so neither are they for a noble picture: the subjects both of the one and of the other ought to have nothing of immoral, low, or filthy in them. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

To FI'LTRATE. v. a. [from filter.] To strain; to percolate; to filter.

The extract obtained by the former operation, burnt to ashes, and those ashes boiled in water and filtrated, yield a fiery salt. Arbuthnot on Alim.

FILTRA'TION. n. s. [from filtrate.] A method by which liquors are procured fine and clear. The filtration in use is straining a liquor through paper, which, by the smallness of its pores, admits only the finer parts through, and keeps the rest behind. Quincy.

We took then common nitre, and having, by the usual way of solution, filtration, and coagulation, reduced it into crystals, we put four ounces of this purified nitre into a strong new crucible. Boyle.

FI'MBLE Hemp. n. s. [Corrupted from female.]

The light Summer hemp, that bears no seed, which is called fimble hemp. Mortimer.
Good flax and good hemp, for to have of her own,
In May a good housewife will see it be sown;
And afterwards trim it, and serve at a need;
The fimble to spin, and the carle for her seed. Tuss.

FIN. [ɣin, Sax. vin, Dut.] The wing of a fish; the limb by which he balances his body and moves in the water.

He that depends

And hews down oaks with rushes. Shak. Othello.
Their fins consist of a number of gristly bones, long and slender, like pins and needles. More.
Thus at half-ebb a rolling sea
Returns, and wins upon the shore;
The watry herd, affrighted at the roar,
Rest on their fins awhile, and stay,
Then backward take their wond'ring way. Dryd.
Still at his oar th' industrious Libys plies;
But as he plies, each busy arm shrinks in,
And by degrees is fashion'd to a fin. Addi on's Ovid.

FIN-FOOTED. adj. [fin and foot] Palmipedous; having feet with membranes between the toes.

It is described like sissipedes, or birds which have their feet or claws divided; whereas it is palmipedour or fin-footed, like swans and geese, according to the method of nature in latirostrous or flat-billed birds; which being generally swimmers, the organ is wisely contrived unto the action, and they are framed with fins or oars upon their feet. Brown.

FI'NABLE. adj. [from fine.] That admits a fine; that which deserves a fine.

This is the order for writs of covenant that be finable. Bacon.

4. In small parts; subtilly; not grossly.

Saltpetre was but grossly beaten; for it should not be finely powdered. Boyle.

5. [Ironically.] Wretchedly; in such a manner as to deserve contemptuous notice.

Let laws be made to obey, and not to be obeyed, and you will find that kingdom finely governed in a short time. South.

For him she loves!
She nam'd not me; that may be Torrismond,
Whom she has thrice in private seen this day:
Then I am finely caught in my own snare. Dryden.

FI'NENESS. n. s. [from fine.]

1. Elegance; beauty; delicacy.

Every thing was full of a choice fineness, that, if it wanted any thing in majesty, it supplied with increase in pleasure; and if at the first it struck not admiration, it ravished with delight. Sidney.

As the French language has more fineness and smoothness at this time, so it had more compass, spirit, and force in Montaigne's days. Temple.

The softness of her sex, and the fineness of her genius, conspire to give her a very distinguishing character. Prior.

2. Show; splendour; gaiety of appearance.

The fineness of cloaths destroys the ease: it often helps men to pain, but can never rid them of any: the body may languish under the most splendid cover. Decay of Piety.

3. Subtility; artfulness; ingenuity.

Those, with the fineness of their souls,
By reason guide his execution. Shakesp.

4. Purity; freedom from dross or base mixtures.

Our works are, indeed, nought else
But the protractive tryals of great Jove,
To find persistive constancy in men;
The fineness of which metal is not found
In fortune's love. Shakesp. Troilus and Cressida.

I am doubtful whether men have sufficiently refined metals; as whether iron, brass, and tin be refined to the height: but when they come to such a fineness as serveth the ordinary use, they try no farther. Bacon's Nat Hist.

The ancients were careful to coin their money in due weight and fineness, only in times of exigence they have diminished both the weight and fineness. Arbuthnot on Coins.

FI'NERY. n. s. [from fine.] Show; splendour of appearance; gaiety of colours.

Dress up your houses and your images,
And put on all the city's finery,
To consecrate this day a festival. Southern.

The capacities of a lady are sometimes apt to fall short in cultivating cleanliness and finery together. Swift.

Don't chuse your place of study by the finery of the prospects, or the most various scenes of sensible things. Watts.

They want to grow rich in their trades, and to maintain their families in some such figure and degree of finery, as a reasonable Christian life has no occasion for. Law.

FINE'SSE. n. s. [Fr.] Artifice; stratagem: an unnecessary word which is creeping into the language.

A circumstance not much to be stood upon, in case it were not upon some finesse. Hayward.

Take away the dross from the silver, and there shall come forth a vessel for the finer. Prov. xxv. 4.

FI'NGER. n. s. [ꝼinger, Sax. from fangen to hold.]

1. The flexible member of the hand by which men catch and hold.

The fingers and thumb in each hand consist of fifteen bones, there being three to each finger. Quincy.

You seem to understand me,
By each at once her choppy finger laying
Upon her skinny lips. Shak. Mac.

Diogenes, who is never said,
For aught that ever I could read,
To whine, put finger i' th' eye, and sob,
Because h' had ne'er another tub. Hudibras.

The hand is divided into four fingers bending forward, and one opposite to them bending backwards, and of greater strength than any of them singly, which we call the thumb, to join with them severally or united; whereby it is fitted to lay hold of objects of any size or quantity. Ray.

A hand of a vast extension, and a prodigious number of fingers playing upon all the organ pipes of the world, and making every one sound a particular note. Keil against Burnet.

Poor Peg sewed, spun, and knit for a livelihood, 'till her fingers ends were sore. Arbuth. John Bull.

2. A small measure of extension; the breadth of a finger.

Go now, go trust the wind's uncertain breath,
Remov'd four fingers from approaching death;
Or seven at most, when thickest is the board. Dryd.

One of these bows with a little arrow did pierce through a piece of steel three fingers thick. Wilkins.

3. The hand; the instrument of work; manufacture; art.

Fool, that forgets her stubborn look,
This softness from thy finger took. Waller.

To FI'NGER. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To touch lightly; to toy with.

Go, get you gone, and let the papers lie;
You would be fingering them to anger me. Shak.

One that is covetous is not so highly pleased with the meer sight and fingering of money, as with the thoughts of his being considered as a wealthy man. Crew's Cosmol. Sac.

2. To touch unseasonably or thievishly.

His ambition would needs be fingering the sceptre, and hoisting him into his father's throne. South.

A whoreson, glasseyeing, superserviceable, finical rogue. Shakesp. King Lear.

I cannot hear a finical fop romancing, how the king took him aside at such a time; what the queen said to him at another. L'Estrange.

FI'NICALLY. adv. [from finical.] Foppishly.

FI'NICALNESS. n. s. [from finical.] Superfluous nicety; foppery.

To FI'NISH. v. a. [finir, Fr. finio, Lat.]

1. To bring to the end purposed; to complete.

For which of you, intending to build a tower, sitteth not down first and counteth the cost, whether he have sufficient to finish it? Luke, xiv. 28

As he had begun, so he would also finish in you the same grace. 2 Cor. viii. 6.

2. To make perfect.

A poet uses episodes; but episodes, taken separately, finish nothing. Broome on the Odyssey.

3. To perfect; to polish to the excellency intended.

Though here you all perfection should not find,
Yet is it all th' Eternal Will design'd;
It is a finish'd work, and perfect in his kind. Blackmore.

I would make what bears your name as finished as my last work ought to be; that is more finished than the rest. Pope.

4. To end; to put an end to.

FI'NISHER. n. s. [from finish.]

1. Performer; accomplisher.

He that of greatest works is finisher,
Oft does them by the weakest minister. Shakesp.

2. One that puts an end; ender.

This was the condition of those times; the world against Athanasius, and Athanasius against it: half an hundred of years spent in doubtful trials which of the two, in the end, would prevail; the side which had all, or else that part which had no friend but God and death, the one a defender of his innocency, the other a finisher of all his troubles. Hooker.

3. One that completes or perfects.

The author and finisher of our faith. Hebrews.

O prophet of glad tidings! finisher
Of utmost hope! Milton's Par. Lost.

FI'NITE. adj. [finitus, Lat.] Limited; bounded; terminated.

Servius conceives no more thereby than a finite number for indefinite. Brown's Vulg. Err.

Finite of any magnitude holds not any proportion to infinite. Locke.

That supposed infinite duration will, by the very supposition, be limited at two extremes, though never so remote asunder, and consequently must needs be finite. Bentley.

FI'NITELESS. adj. [from finite.] Without bounds; unlimited.

It is ridiculous unto reason, and finiteless as their desires. Brown's Vulg. Err.

FI'NITELY. adv. [from finite.] Within certain limits; to a certain degree.

They are creatures still, and [illegible] an infinite distance from God; whereas all their excellencies can make them but finitely distant from us. Stillingfleet.

FI'NITENESS. n. s. [from finite.] Limitation; confinement within certain boundaries.

I ought now to unbay the current of my passion, and love without other boundary than what is set by the finiteness of my natural powers. Norris.

FI'NITUDE. n. s. [from finite.] Limitation; confinement within certain boundaries. This is hardly an authorised word.

Finitude, applied to natural or created things, imports the proportions of the several degrees of affections, or properties of these things to one another; infinitude, the unboundedness of these degrees of affections, or properties. Cheyne.

FI'NLESS. adj. [from fin.] Wanting fins.

He angers me
With telling of the moldwarp and the ant,
And of a dragon and a finless fish. Shak. Hen. IV.

FI'NLIKE. adj. [fin and like.] Formed in imitation of fins.

In shipping such as this, the Irish kern
And untaught Indian on the stream did glide;
Ere sharp-keel'd boats to stem the flood did learn
Or finlike oars did spread from either side. Dryd.

FI'NNED. adj. [from fin.] Having broad edges spread out on either side.

They plough up the turf with a broad finned plough. Mortimer.

FI'NNY. adj. [from fin.] Furnished with fins; formed for the element of water.

High o'er the main in wat'ry pomp he rides,
His azure car and finny courses guides;
Proteus his name. Dryden's Virgil.
New herds of beasts he seuds the plains to share;
New colonies of birds to people air;
And to their oozy beds the finny fish repair. Dryd.
While black with storms the ruffled ocean rolls,
And from the fisher's art defend her finny sholes.
Blackmore
With hairy springes we the birds betray;
Slight lines of hair surprize the finny prey. Pope.

9. Liveliness of imagination; vigour of fancy; intellectual activity; force of expression; spirit of sentiment.

Nor can the snow that age does shed
Upon thy rev'rend head,
Quench or allay the noble fire within,
But all that youth can be thou art. Cowley
They have no notion of life and fire in fancy and in words, and any thing that is just in grammar and in measure is good oratory and poetry to them.
Felton.
He brings, to make us from our ground retire,
The reasoner's weapons, and the poet's fire. Blackm.
Exact Racine, and Corneille's noble fire,
Taught us that France had something to admire.
Pope.
The bold Longinus all the nine inspire,
And warm the critick with a poet's fire. Pope.
Oh may some spark of your celestial fire,
The last, the meanest of your sons inspire. Pope.

10. The passion of love.

Love various hearts does variously inspire,
It stirs in gentle bosoms gentle fire,
Like that of incense on the altar laid;
But raging flames tempestuous souls invade;
A fire which every windy passion blows,
With pride it mounts, and with revenge it glows.
Dryden.
The fire of love in youthful blood,
Like what is kindled in brush-wood,
But for a moment burns. Shadwell.
The god of love retires;
Dim are his torches, and extinct his fires. Pope.
New charms shall still increase desire,
And time's swift wing shall fan the fire. Moore's Fa.

4. First or last. At one time or other.

But sure a general doom on man is past,
And all are fools and lovers first or last. Dryden.

FIRST-BEGOT. } n. s. [from first and begot.] The eldest of children.
FIRST-BEGOTTEN. }

His first-begot, we know; and sore have felt,
When his fierce thunder drove us to the deep.
Milton.

FIRST-BORN. n. s. [first and born.] Eldest; the first by the order of nativity.

Last, with one midnight stroke, all the first-born
Of Egypt must lie dead. Milton's Par. Lost.
Hail, holy light, offspring of heav'n first-born!
Milton.

The first-born has not a sole or peculiar right, by any law of God and Nature; the younger children having an equal title with him. Locke on Education.

FIRST-FRUITS. n. s. [first and fruits.]

1. What the season earliest produces or matures of any kind.

A sweaty reaper from his tillage brought
First-fruits, the green ear, and the yellow sheaf.
Milton.

The blooming hopes of my then very young patron have been confirmed by most noble first-fruits, and his life is going on towards a plentiful harvest of all accumulated virtues. Prior.

2. The profits of any thing which are soonest gained.

Although the king loved to employ and advance bishops, because, having rich bishopricks, they carried their reward upon themselves; yet he did use to raise them by steps, that he might not lose the profit of the first-fruits, which by that course of gradation was multiplied. Bacon's Henry VII.

3. The earliest effect of any thing.

See, Father, what first-fruits on earth are sprung,
From thy implanted grace in man! Milton.

A sharp point, bended upward and backward, like a fish-hook. Grew's Museum.

FISHPOND. n. s. [fish and pond.] A small pool for fish.

Fish ponds are no small improvement of watry boggy lands. Mortimer's Husbandry.
Fish-ponds were made where former forests grew
And hills were levell'd to extend the view. Prior.
After the great value the Romans put upon fishes, it will not appear incredible that C. Hirtius should sell his fish-ponds for quadragies H. S. 32,291*l* 13*s* 4*d*. Arbuthnot.

FI'SHER. n. s. [from fish.] One who is employed in catching fish.

In our sight the three were taken up,
By fishermen of Corinth, as we thought:
At length another seiz'd on us,
And would have reft the fishers of their prey,
Had not they been very slow of sail Shakesp.
We know that town is but with fishers fraught,
Where Theseus govern'd and where Plato taught.
Sandys.
Lest he should suspect it, draw it from him,
As fishers do the bait, to make him follow it.
Denham.
A soldier now he with his coat appears;
A fisher now, his trembling angle bears. Pope.

Fluid or solid comprehend all the middle degrees between extreme fixedness and coherency, and the most rapid intestine motion of the particles of bodies. Bentley.

4. Steadiness; settled opinion or resolution.

A fixedness in religion will not give my conscience leave to consent to innovations. King Charles.

FIXI'DITY. n s. [from fixed.] Coherence of parts, opposed to volatility. A word of Boyle.

Bodies mingled by the fire are differing as to the fixidity and volatility, and yet are so combined by the first operation of the fire, that itself does scarce afterwards separate them. Boyle.

FI'XITY. n. s. [fixité, Fr.] Coherence of parts, opposed to volatility.

And are not the sun and fixed stars great earths vehemently hot, whose heat is conserved by the greatness of the bodies, and the mutual action and reaction between them, and the light which they emit, and whose parts are kept from fuming away, not only by their fixity, but also by the vast weight and density of the atmospheres incumbent upon them. Newton's Opticks.

FI'XTURE. n. s. [from fix.]

1. Position.

The fixture of her eye hath motion in't,
As we were mock'd with art. Shak. Winter's Tale.

2. Stable pressure.

The firm fixture of thy foot would give an excellent motion to thy gift. Shakesp.

3. Firmness; stable state.

Frights, changes, horrours,
Divert and crack, rend and deracinate
The unity and married calm of states
Quite from their fixture. Shakesp. Troil. and Cress.

FI'ZGIG. n. s. A kind of dart or harpoon with which seamen strike fish.

Can'st thou with fizgigs pierce him to the quick,
Or in his skull thy barbed trident stick? Sand. Job.

FLA'BBY. adj. [flaccidus, Lat.] Soft; not firm; easily shaking or yielding to the touch.

Paleness, a weak pulse, palpitations of the heart, flabby and black flesh, are symptoms of weak fibres. Arbuthnot.

Pulls out the rags contriv'd to prop
Her flabby dugs, and down they drop. Swift.

FLA'BILE. adj. [flabilis, Lat.] Blown about by the wind; subject to be blown. Dict.

FLA'CCID. adj. [flaccidus, Lat.] Weak; limber; not stiff; lax; not tense.

The bowing and inclining the head is found in the great flower of the sun: the cause I take to be is, that the part against which the sun beateth waxeth more faint and flaccid in the stalk, and thereby less able to support the flower. Bacon.

They whose muscles are weak or flaccid, are unapt to pronounce the letter r. Holder.

The surgeon ought to vary the diet as he finds the fibres are too flaccid and produce funguses, or as they harden and produce callosities. Arbuthnot.

FLACCI'DITY. n. s. [from flaccid.] Laxity; limberness; want of tension; want of stiffness.

There is neither fluxion nor pain, but flaccidity joined with insensibility. Wiseman's Surgery.

To FLAG. v. n. [flaggeren, Dut. ꝼleoȝan, Sax. to fly.]

1. To hang loose without stiffness or tension.

Beds of cotton wool hung up between two trees, not far from the ground; in which, flagging down in the middle, men, wives and children lie together. Abbot.

The jades
That drag the tragick melancholy night,
Who with their drowsy, slow, and flagging wings
Clip dead men's graves. Shakesp. Henry VI.

It keeps those slender and aerial bodies separated and stretched out, which otherwise, by reason of their flexibleness and weight, would flag or curl. Boyle's Spring of the Air.

Like a fiery meteor sunk the sun,
The promise of a storm; the shifting gales
Forsake by fits, and fill the flagging sails Dryd.

2. To grow spiritless or dejected.

My flagging soul flies under her own pitch,
Like fowl in air too damp, and lags along
As if she were a body in a body:
My senses too are dull and stupify'd,
Their edge rebated: sure some ill approaches.
Dryden's Don Sebastian.

3. To grow feeble; to lose vigour.

Juice in language is somewhat less than blood; for if the words be but becoming and signifying, and the sense gentle, there is juice: but where that wanteth, the language is thin, flagging, poor, starved, scarce covering the bone, and shews like stones in a sack: some men, to avoid redundancy, run into that; and while they strive to hinder ill blood or juice, they lose their good.
Ben Jonson's Discoveries.

His stomach will want victuals at the usual hour, either fretting itself into a troublesome excess, or flagging into a downright want of appetite. Locke.

Fame, when it is once at a stand, naturally flags and languishes. Addison's Spectator.

If on sublimer wings of love and praise,
My love above the starry vault I raise,
Lur'd by some vain conceit of pride or lust,
I flag, I drop, and flutter in the dust. Arbuthnot.

He sees a spirit hath been raised against him, and he only watches 'till it begins to flag: he goes about watching when to devour us. Swift.

The pleasures of the town begin to flag and grow languid, giving way daily to cruel inroads from the spleen. Swift.

To FLAG. v. a.

1. To let fall into feebleness; to suffer to droop.

Take heed, my dear, youth flies apace;
As well as Cupid, Time is blind:
Soon must those glories of thy face
The fate of vulgar beauty find:
The thousand loves, that arm thy potent eye,
Must drop their quivers, flag their wings, and die.
Prior.

2. [From flag, a species of stone.] To lay with broad stone.

The sides and floor were all flagged with excellent marble. Sandys.
A white stone used for flagging floors. Woodw.

FLAG. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A water plant with a bladed leaf and yellow flower, so called from its motion in the wind.

She took an ark of bulrushes, and laid it in the flags by the river's brink. Ex. ii. 3
Can bulrushes but by the river grow?
Can flags there flourish where no waters flow?
Sandys.
There be divers fishes that cast their spawn on flags or stones. Walton's Angler.
Cut flag roots, and the roots of other weeds.
Mortimer's Husbandry.

2. The colours or ensign of a ship or land-forces, by which signals are made at sea, or regiments are distinguished in the field.

These flags of France that are advanced here,
Before the eye and prospect of your town,
Have hither march'd to your endamagement.
Shakesp.
He hangs out as many flags as he descryeth vessels; square, if ships; if gallies, pendants.
Sandys.
Democracies are less subject to sedition than where there are stirps of nobles: for if men's eyes are upon the persons, it is for the business sake as fittest, and not for flags or pedigree. Bacon.
Let him be girt
With all the grisly legion that troop
Under the sooty flag of Acheron,
Harpies and hydras, or all the monstrous forms
'Twixt Africa and Inde, I'll find him out,
And force him to restore his purchase back,
Or drag him by the curls to a foul death. Milton.
The French and Spaniards, when your flags appear,
Forget their hatred, and consent to fear. Waller.
The interpretation of that article about the flag, is a ground at pleasure for opening a war.
Temple.
In either's flag the golden serpents bear,
Erecting crests alike, like volumes rear,
And mingle friendly hissings in the air. Dryden.
Then they, whose mothers, frantick with their fear,
In woods and wilds the flags of Bacchus bear,
And lead his dances with dishevell'd hair.
Dryden.

3. A species of stone used for smooth pavements, [flache, old French.]

Part of two flags striated, but deeper on one side than the other. Woodward on Fossils.
Flagstone will not split, as slate does, being found formed into flags, or thin plates, which are no other than so many strata. Woodw. on Fossils.

FLAG-BROOM. n. s. [from flag and broom.] A broom for sweeping flags or pavements, commonly made of birch-twigs, or of the leaves of the dwarf palm, imported from Spain.

FLAG-OFFICER. n. s. [flag and officer.] A commander of a squadron.

Her grandfather was a flag-officer. Addison.

FLAG-SHIP. n. s. [flag and ship.] The ship in which the commander of a fleet is.

FLAG-WORM. n. s. [flag and worm.] A grub bred in watery places among flags or sedge.

He will in the three hot months bite at a flag-worm, or a green gentle. Walton's Angler.

FLA'GELET. n. s. [flageolet, Fr.] A small flute; a small instrument of wind musick.

Play us a lesson on your flagelet. More.

FLAGELLA'TION. n. s. [from flagello, Lat.] The use of the scourge.

By Bridewell all descend,
As morning pray'r and flagellation end. Garth.

FLA'GGINESS. n. s. [from flaggy.] Laxity; limberness; want of tension.

FLA'GGY. adj. [from [flag.]

1. Weak; lax; limber; not stiff; not tense.

His flaggy wings, when forth he did display,
Were like two sails, in which the hollow wind
Is gather'd full, and worketh speedy way.
Fairy Queen.
That basking in the sun thy bees may lye,
And resting there, their flaggy pinions dry.
Dryden.

2. Weak in taste; insipid.

Graft an apple-cion upon the stock of a cole-wort, and it will bear a great flaggy apple.
Bacon.

FLAGITITIOUS. adj. [from flagitius, Lat.]

1. Wicked; villanous; atrocious.

No villainy or flagitious action was ever yet committed, but, upon a due enquiry into the causes of it, it will be found, that a lye was first or last the principal engine to effect it. South.
There's no working upon a flagitious and perverse nature by kindness and discipline.
L'Estrange.
First, those flagitious times,
Pregnant with unknown crimes,
Conspire to violate the nuptial bed. Roscommon.
Perjury is a crime of so flagitious a nature, we cannot be too careful in avoiding every approach towards it. Addison.
But if in noble minds some dregs remain,
Not yet purg'd off, of spleen and sour disdain,
Discharge that rage on more provoking crimes,
Nor fear a dearth in these flagitious times. Pope.

2. Guilty of crimes.

He dies, sad outcast of each church and state,
And harder still, flagitious yet not great. Pope.

FLAGI'TIOUSNESS. n. s. [from flagitious.] Wickedness; villany.

FLA'GON. n. s. [flacced, Welsh; flaxe, Sax. flaske, Dan. flacon, Fr. fiasco, Ital. flasco, Span.] A vessel of drink with a narrow mouth.

A mad rogue! he pour'd a flagon of Rhenish on my head once. Shakesp. Hamlet.
More had sent him by a suitor in Chancery two silver flagons. Bacon's Apophth.
Did they coin pisspots, bowls, and flagons
Int' officers of horse and dragoons? Hudibras.
His trusty flagon, full of potent juice,
Was hanging by, worn thin with age and use.
Roscommon.
One flagon walks the round, that none should think
They either change, or stint him in his drink.
Dryden.

FLA'GRANCY. n. s. [flagrantia, Lat.] Burning; heat; fire.

Lust causeth a flagrancy in the eyes, as the sight and the touch are the things desired, and therefore the spirits resort to those parts.
Bacon's Nat. Hist.

FLA'GRANT. adj. [flagrans, Lat.]

1. Ardent; burning; eager. It is always used figuratively.

A thing which filleth the mind with comfort and heavenly delight, stirreth up flagrant desires and affections, correspondent unto that which the words contain. Hooker.

2. Glowing; flushed.

See Sapho, at her toilet's greasy task,
Then issuing flagrant to an evening mask.
So morning insects, that in muck begun,
Shine, buz, and fly-blow in the setting sun. Pope.

3. Red; imprinted red.

Their common loves, a lewd abandon'd pack,
The beadle's lash still flagrant on their back. Prior.

4. Notorious; flaming into notice.

When fraud is great, it furnishes weapons to defend itself, and at worst, if the crimes be so flagrant that a man is laid aside out of perfect shame, he retires loaded with the spoils of the nation. Swift.
With equal poise let steady justice sway,
And flagrant crimes with certain vengeance pay;
But, 'till the proofs are clear, the stroke delay.
Smith.

FLAGRA'TION. n. s. [flagro, Lat.] Burning. Dict.

FLA'GSTAFF. n. s. [flag and staff.] The staff on which the flag is fixed.

The duke, less numerous, but in courage more,
On wings of all the winds to combat flies:
His murdering guns a loud defiance roar,
And bloody crosses on his flagstaffs rise. Dryden.

FLAIL. n. s. [flagellum, Lat. flegel, German.] The instrument with which grain is beaten out of the ear; the tool of the thresher.

Our soldiers, like the night-owl's lazy flight,
Or like a lazy thresher with a flail,
Fell gently down as if they struck their friends
Shakesp. Hen. VI.
When in one night, ere glimpse of morn,
His shadowy flail hath thresh'd the corn,
That ten day-labourers could not end. Milton.
In this pile shall reign a mighty prince,
Born for a scourge of wit, and flail of sense.
Dryden.
The dexterous handling of the flail, or the plough, and being good workmen with these tools, did not hinder Gideon's and Cincinnatus's skill in arms and government. Locke.
The thresher, Duck, could o'er the queen prevail:
The proverb says, no fence against a flail. Swift.

FLAKE. n. s. [floccus, Lat.]

1. Any thing that appears loosely held together, like a flock of wool.

Crimson circles, like red flakes in the element, when the weather is hottest. Sidney.
And from his wide-devouring oven sent
A flake of fire, that flushing in his beard,
Him all amaz'd, and almost made affear'd.
Fairy Queen.
The earth is sometimes covered with snow two or three feet deep, made up only of little flakes or pieces of ice. Burnet.
Small drops of a misling rain, descending through a freezing air, do each of them shoot into one of those figured icicles; which, being ruffled by the wind, in their fall are broken, and clustered together into small parcels, which we call flakes of snow. Grew's Cosmology.
Upon throwing in a stone the water [illegible] for a considerable time, and at the same time are seen little flakes of scurf rising up. Addison.

2. A stratum; layer; film; lamina.

The flakes of his tough flesh so firmly bound,
As not to be divorced by a wound. Sandys.
The teeth cut away great flakes of the metal, till it received the perfect form the teeth would make. Moxon.

To FLAKE. v. a. [from the noun.] To form in flakes or bodies loosely connected.

From the bleak pole no winds inclement blow,
Mold the round hail, or flake the fleecy snow.
Pope's Odys.

To FLAKE. v. n. To break into laminæ; to part in loose bodies.

FLAKY. adj. [from flake.]

1. Loosely hanging together.

The silent hour steals on,
And flaky darkness breaks within the East. Smith

The trumpet roars, long flaky flames expire,
With sparks that seem to set the world on fire.
Pope.

Hence, when the snows in Winter cease to weep,
And undissolv'd their flaky texture keep,
The banks with ease their humble streams contain,
Which swell in Summer, and those banks disdain.
Blackm.

2. Lying in layers or strata; broken into laminæ.

FLAM. n. s. [A cant word of no certain etymology.] A falsehood; a lye; an illusory pretext.

A flam more senseless than the rog'ry
Of old aruspicy and aug'ry. Hudibras.

'Till these men can prove the things, ordered by our church, to be either intrinsically unlawful or indecent, all pretences or pleas of conscience to the contrary are nothing but cant and cheat, flam and delusion. South.

What are most of the histories of the world but lyes? Lyes immortalized and consigned over as a perpetual abuse and flam upon posterity. South.

To FLAM. v. a. [from the noun.] To deceive with a lye. Merely cant.

For so our ignorance was flamm'd,
To damn ourselves t' avoid being damn'd.
Hudibras.

God is not to be flammed off with lyes, who knows exactly what thou can'st do, and what not. South.

FLAMBEAU. n. s. [Fr.] A lighted torch.

The king seized a flambeau with zeal to destroy. Dryden.

As the attendants carried each of them a flambeau in their hands, the sultan, after having ordered all the lights to be put out, gave the word to enter the house, find out the criminal, and put him to death. Addison's Guardian.

FLAME. n. s. [flamma, Lat. flamme, Fr.]

1. Light emitted from fire.

Is not flame a vapour, fume, or exhalation heated red hot, that is, so hot as to shine? For bodies do not flame without emitting a copious fume, and this fume burns in the flame. Newton's Opt.

What flame, what lightning e'er
So quick an active force did bear! Cowley.

2. Fire.

Jove, Promethus' theft allow;
The flames he once stole from thee, grant him now. Cowley.

3. Ardour of temper or imagination; brightness of fancy; vigour of thought.

Of all our elder plays,
This and Philaster have the loudest fame;
Great are their faults, and glorious is their flame:
In both our English genius is express,
Lofty and bold, but negligently dress. Waller.

4. Ardour of inclination.

Smit with the love of kindred arts we came,
And met congenial, mingling flame with flame.
Pope.

5. Passion of love.

My heart's on flame, and does like fire
To her aspire. Cowley.

Come arm'd in flames; for I would prove
All the extremities of love. Cowley.

No warning of th' approaching flame;
Swiftly like sudden death it came;
I lov'd the moment I beheld. Granville.

To FLAME. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To shine as fire; to burn with emission of light.

Can you think to blowout the intended fire your city is ready to flame in, with such weak breath as this? Shakesp.

He fell flaming through th' ethereal sky
To bottomless perdition. Milton.

Hell all around
As one great furnace flam'd. Milton.

2. To shine like flame.

Behold it like an ample curtain spread,
Now streak'd and glowing with the morning red;
Anon at noon in flaming yellow bright,
And chusing sable for the peaceful night. Prior.

3. To break out in violence of passion.

FLAMECO'LOURED. adj. [flame and colour.] Of a bright yellow colour.

'Tis strong, and it does indifferent well in flame-coloured stockings. Shakesp. Twelfth Night.

August shall bear the form of a young man of a fierce and cholerick aspect, in a flamecoloured garment. Peacham.

FLA'MEN. n. s. [Lat.] A priest; one that officiates in solemn offices.

Then first the flamen tasted living food;
Next his grim idol smear'd with human blood.
Pope.

FLAMMABI'LITY. n. s. [flamma, Lat.] The quality of admitting to be set on fire, so as to blaze.

In the sulphur of bodies torrified, that is, the oily, fat and unctuous parts, consist the principles of flammability. Brown.

FLAMMA'TION. n. s. [flammatio, Lat.] The act of setting on flame.

White or crystalline arsenick, being artificial, and sublimed with salt, will not endure flammation. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

FLA'MMEOUS. adj. [flammeus, Lat.] Consisting of flame; resembling flame.

This flammeous light is not over all the body. Brown.

FLA'MY. adj. [from flame.]

1. Inflamed; burning; blazing.

My thoughts imprison'd in my secret woes,
With flamy breaths do issue oft in sound. Sidney.

2. Having the nature of flame.

The vital spirits of living creatures are a substance compounded of an airy and flamy matter; and though air and flame, being free, will not well mingle, yet bound in by a body they will. Bacon.

FLANK. n. s. [flanc, Fr. according to Menage, from λαγὼν; more probably from latus, Lat.]

1. That part of the side of a quadruped near the hinder thigh.

The belly shall be eminent by shadowing the flank. Peacham.

2. [In men.] The lateral part of the lower belly.

He said, and pois'd in air, the jav'lin sent:
Through Paris' shield the forceful weapon went,
His corslet pierces, and his garment rends,
And glancing downward near his flank descends.
Pope.

3. The side of any army or fleet.

Great ordnance and small shot thundered and showered upon our men from the rampier in front, and from the gallies that lay at sea in flank. Bacon's War with Spain.

Gray was appointed to stand on the left side, in such sort as he might take the flank of the enemy. Hayward.

To right and left the front
Divided, and to either flank retir'd. Milton.

4. [In fortification.] That part of the bastion which reaches from the curtain to the face, and defends the opposite face, the flank and the curtain. Harris.

To FLANK. v. a.

1. To attack the side of a battalion or fleet.

2. To be posted so as to overlook or command any pass on the side.

With fates averse against their king's command,
Arm'd on the right, and on the left they stand,
And flank the passage. Dryden's Æn.

3. To secure on the side.

By the rich scent we found our perfum'd prey,
Which, flank'd with rocks, did close in covert lay,
Dryden.

FLA'NKER. n. s. [from flank.] A fortification jutting out so as to command the side of a body marching to the assault.

The Turks, discouraged with the loss of their fellows, and sore beaten by the Spaniards out of their flankers, were enforced to retire. Knolles.

Like storms of hail the stones fell down from high,
Cast from the bulwarks, flankers, ports, and towers.
Fairf.

To FLA'NKER. v. a. [flanquer, Fr.] To defend by lateral fortifications.

FLA'NNEL. n. s. [gwlanen, Welsh; from gwlan wool, Davies.] A soft nappy stuff of wool.

I cannot answer the Welch flannel. Shakesp.

FLAP. n. s. [læppe, Sax.]

1. Any thing that hangs broad and loose, fastened only by one side.

There is a peculiar provision for the windpipe, that is, a cartilaginous flap upon the opening of the larinx, which hath an open cavity for the admission of the air. Brown.

Some surgeons make a crucial incision, upon the supposition that the wound will more easily heal by turning down the flaps. Sharp.

2. The motion of any thing broad and loose.

3. [A disease in horses.]

When a horse has the flaps, you may perceive his lips swelled on both sides of his mouth; and that which is in the blisters is like the white of an egg: cut some slashes with a knife, and rub it once with salt, and it will cure. Farrier's Dict.

To FLAP. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To beat with a flap, as flies are beaten.

A hare, hard put to it by an eagle, took sanctuary in a ditch with a beetle: the eagle flapt off the former, and devoured the other. L'Estrange.

Yet let me flap this bug with gilded wings,
This painted child of dirt, that stinks and stings.
Pope.

2. To move with a flap or noise made by the stroke of any thing broad.

With fruitless toil
Flap filmy pinions oft, to extricate
Their feet in liquid shackles bound. Philips.

Three times, all in the dead of night,
A bell was heard to ring;
And shrieking at her window thrice
The raven flapp'd his wing. Tickel.

To FLAP. v. n.

1. To ply the wings with noise.

'Tis common for a duck to run flapping and fluttering away, as if maimed, to carry people from her young. L'Estrange.

The dire flapping on the shield of Turnus, and fluttering about his head, disheartened him in the duel. Dryden's Æneid.

2. To fall with flaps or broad parts depending.

When suffocating mists obscure the morn,
Let thy worst wig, long us'd to storms, be worn;
This knows the powder'd footman, and with care
Beneath his flapping hat secures his hair. Gay.

FLA'PDRAGON. n. s. [from a dragon supposed to breathe fire.]

1. A play in which they catch raisins out of burning brandy, and, extinguishing them by closing the mouth, eat them.

2. The thing eaten at flapdragon.

He plays at quoits well, and eats conger and fennel, and drinks candles ends for flapdragons, and rides the wild mare with the boys. Shakesp.

To FLA'PDRAGON. v. a. [from the noun.] To swallow; to devour. Low cant.

But to make an end of the ship, to see how the sea flapdragoned it. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

FLA'PEARED. adj. [flap and ear.] Having loose and broad ears.

A whoreson, beetle-headed, flapeared knave. Shakesp.

To FLARE. v. a. [from flederen to flutter, Dut. Skinner; perhaps accidentally changed from glare.]

1. To glitter with transient lustre.

Doctrine and life, colours and light, in one
When they combine and mingle, bring
A strong regard and awe; but speech alone
Doth vanish like a flaring thing,
And in the ear, not conscience, ring. Herbert.

2. To glitter offensively.

When the sun begins to fling
His flaring beams, me, goddess, bring
To arched walks of twilight groves. Milton.

3. To be in too much light.

I cannot stay
Flaring in sunshine all the day. Prior.

4. To flutter with a splendid show.

She shall be loose curob'd,
With ribbands pendant flaring 'bout her head. Shakesp.

FLASH. n. s. [φλὲξ, Minshew.]

1. A sudden, quick, transitory blaze.

When the cross blue lightning seem'd to open
The breast of heav'n, I did present myself
Ev'n in the aim and very flash of it. Shakesp.

We see a flash of a piece is seen sooner than the noise is heard. Bacon's Natural History.

One with a flash begins, and ends in smoak;
The other cut of smoak brings glorious light. Roscommon.

And as Ægeon, when with heaven he strove,
Defy'd the forky lightning from afar,
At fifty mouths his flaming breath expires,
And flash for flash returns, and fires for fires. Dryden.

2. Sudden burst of wit or merriment.

Where be your gibes now? your gambols? your songs? your flashes of merriment, that were wont to set the table in a roar? Shakesp.

Wicked men prefer the light flashes of a wanton mirth, which for a while suspend reflection, and hide the sinner from himself, to such discourses as awaken conscience. Rogers.

3. A short transient state

The Persians and Macedonians had it for a flash. Bacon.

4. A body of water driven by violence.

To FLASH. v. n.

1. To glitter with a quick and transient flame.

This salt powdered, and put into a crucible, was, by the injection of well kindled charcoal, made to flash divers times, almost like melted nitre. Boyle.

2. To burst out into any kind of violence.

By day and night he wrongs me; ev'ry hour
He flashes into one gross crime or other,
That sets us all at odds. Shakesp. King Lear.

3. To break out into wit, merriment, or bright thought.

They flash out sometimes into an irregular greatness of thought. Felton on the Classicks.

To FLASH. v. a. To strike up large bodies of water from the surface.

With his raging arms he rudely flash'd
The waves about, and all his armour swept,
That all the blood and filth away was wash'd. Fairy Queen.

If the sea-water be flashed with a stick or oar, the same casteth a shining colour, and the drops resemble sparkles of fire. Carew.

FLA'SHER. n. s. [from flash.] A man of more appearance of wit than reality. Dict.

FLAS'HILY. adv. [from flashy.] With empty show; without real power of wit, or solidity of thought.

FLA'SHY. adj. [from flash.]

1. Empty; not solid; showy without substance.

Flashy wits cannot fathom the whole extent of a large discourse. Digby on the Soul, Dedication.

When they list, their lean and flashy songs
Grate on their scrannel pipes of wretched straw. Milton

This mean conceit, this darling mystery, [buy;
Which thou think'st nothing, friend! thou shalt not
Nor will I change for all the flashy wit. Dryden.

2. [From flaccidus, Skinner.] Insipid; without force or spirit.

Distilled books are, like common distilled waters, flashy things. Bacon's Essays.

The tastes that most offend in fruits, herbs and roots, are bitter, harsh, sour, waterish or flashy. Bacon's Natural History.

FLASK. n. s. [flasque, Fr.]

Taste so divine! that what of sweet before
Hath touch'd my sense, flat seems to this and harsh. Milton.

The miry fields,
Rejoicing in rich mould, must ample fruit
Of beauteous form produce; pleasing to sight,
But to the tongue inelegant and flat. Philips.

8. Dull; unanimated; frigid.

Short speeches fly abroad like darts, and are thought to be shot out of secret intentions; but as for large discourses, they are flat things, and not so much noted. Bacon.

Some short excursions of a broken vow
He made indeed, but flat insipid stuff. Dryden.

9. Depressed; spiritless; dejected.

I feel my genial spirits droop,
My hopes all flat, nature within me seems
In all her functions weary of herself. Milton.

10. Unpleasing; tasteless.

How weary, stale, flat and unprofitable
Seem to me all the uses of this world! Shakesp.

To one firmly persuaded of the reality of heavenly happiness, and earnestly desirous of obtaining it, all earthly satisfactions must needs look little, and grow flat and unsavoury. Atterbury's Serm.

11. Peremptory; absolute; downright.

His horse with flat tiring taught him, that discreet stays make speedy journeys. Sidney.

It is a flat wrong to punish the thought or purpose of any before it be enacted; for true justice punisheth nothing but the evil act or wicked word. Spenser.

As it is in the nature of all men to love liberty, so they become flat libertines, and fall to all licentiousness. Spenser.

You start away,
And lend no ear unto my purposes;
Those prisoners you shall keep:
——I will, that's flat. Shakesp. Henry IV.

Thus repuls'd, our final hope
Is flat despair: we must exasperate
Th' Almighty Victor to spend all his rage,
And that must end us. Milton's Paradise Lost.

If thou sin in wine or wantonness,
Boast not thereof, nor make thy shame thy glory;
Frailty gets pardon by submissiveness,
But he that boasts, shuts that out of his story,
He makes flat war with God, and doth defy,
With his meer clod of earth, the spacious sky. Herbert.

You had broke and robb'd his house,
And stole his talismanique louse;
And all his new-found old inventions,
With flat felonious intentions. Hudibras.

12. Not shrill; not acute; not sharp in sound.

If you stop the holes of a hawk's bell, it will make no ring, but a flat noise or rattle. Bacon.

The upper end of the windpipe is endued with several cartilages and muscles to contract or dilate it, as we would have our voice flat or sharp. Ray.

FLAT. n. s.

1. A level; an extended plane.

The strings of a lute, viol, or virginals, give a far greater sound, by reason of the knot, board and concave underneath, than if there were nothing but only the flat of a board to let in the upper air into the lower. Bacon.

Because the air receiveth great tincture from the earth, expose flesh or fish, both upon a stake of wood some height above the earth, and upon the flat of the earth. Bacon.

It comes near an artificial miracle to make divers distinct eminences appear a flat by [illegible] of shadows, and yet the shadows themselves [illegible] to appear. Wotton's Architecture.

He has cut the side of the rock into a flat for a garden, and by laying on it the waste earth, that he found in several of the neighbouring parts, furnished out a kind of luxury for a hermit Addison.

2. Even ground; not mountainous.

Now pile your dust upon the quick and dead,
'Till of this flat a mountain you have made,
T' o'ertop old Pelion, or the skyish head
Of blue Olympus. Shakesp. Hamlet.

The way is ready and not long,
Beyond a row of myrtles, on a flat,
Fast by a mountain. Milton's Par. Lost.

3. A smooth low ground exposed to inundations.

The ocean, overpeering of his list,
Eats not the flats with more impetuous haste
Than young Laertes, in a riotous head,
O'erbears your officers. Shakesp. Hamlet.

All the infections, that the sun sucks up
From bogs, fens, flats, on Prospero fall. Shakesp.
Half my pow'rs this night,
Passing these flats, are taken by the tide;
These Lincoln washes have devoured them. Shak.

4. Shallow; strand; place in the sea where the water is not deep enough for ships.

I should not see the sandy hour-glass run,
But I should think of shallows and of flats. Shak.
The difficulty is very great to bring them in or out through so many flats and sands, if wind and weather be not very favourable. Raleigh's Essays.
Having newly left these grammatick flats and shallows, where they stuck unreasonably, they are now turmoiled with their unballasted wits in fathomless and unquiet deeps of controversy. Milton.
Full in the prince's passage hills of sand,
And dang'rous flats, in secret ambush lay,
Where the false tides skim o'er the cover'd land,
And seamen with dissembled depths betray. Dryd.
Must we now have an ocean of mere flats and sh allows, to the utter ruin of navigation? Bentley.

5. The broad side of a blade.

A darted mandate came [frame,
From that great will which moves this mighty
Bid me to thee, my royal charge, repair,
To guard thee from the dæmons of the air;
My flaming sword above 'em to display,
All keen and ground upon the edge of day,
The flat to sweep the visions from thy mind,
The edge to cut 'em through that staybehind. Dryd.

6. Depression of thought or language.

Milton's Paradise Lost is admirable; but am I therefore bound to maintain, that there are no flats amongst his elevations, when 'tis evident he creeps along sometimes for above an hundred lines together. Dryden.

7. A surface without relief, or prominences.

Are there then such ravishing charms in a dull unvaried flat, to make a sufficient compensation for the chief things of the ancient mountains, and for the precious things of the lasting hills? Bentley.

To FLAT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To level; to depress; to make broad and smooth.

The ancients say, if you take two twigs of several fruit-trees, and flat them on the sides, and bind them close, and set them in the ground, they will come up in one stock. Bacon.
With horrid shapes she does her sons expose,
Distends their swelling lips, and flats their nose. Creech.

2. To make vapid.

An orange, lemon and apple, wrapt in a linen cloth, being buried for a fortnight four feet deep within the earth, though in a moist place and rainy time, were become a little harder than they were; otherwise fresh in their colour, but their juice somewhat flatted Bacon's Natural History.

To FLAT. v. n.

1. To grow flat: opposed to swell.

I burnt it the second time, and observed the [illegible] shrink, and the swelling to flat yet more than at first. Temple.

2. To render unanimated or evanid.

Nor are constant forms of prayer more likely to flat and hinder the spirit of prayer and devotion, than unpremeditated and confused variety to distract and lose it. King Charles.

FLA'TLONG. adv. [flat and long.] With the flat downwards; not edgewise.

What a blow was there given?
—An it had fallen flatlong. Shakesp. Tempest.

To yield him more obedience, or support. Daniel.
Unjust, thou say'st,
Flatly unjust, to bind with laws the free. Milton.

Not any interpreters allow it to be spoken of such as flatly deny the being of God; but of them that believing his existence, seclude him from directing the world. Bentley.

FLA'TNESS. n. s. [from flat.]

1. Evenness; level extension.
2. Want of relief or prominence.

It appears so very plain and uniform, that one would think the coiner looked on the flatness of a figure, as one of the greatest beauties in sculpture. Addison on Medals.

3. Deadness; insipidity; vapidness.

Deadness or flatness in cyder is often occasioned by the too free admission of air into the vessel. Mortimer's Husbandry.

4. Dejection of fortune.

The emperor of Russia was my father.
Oh, that he were alive, and here beholding
His daughter's trial! that he did but see
The flatness of my misery! Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

5. Dejection of mind; want of life; want of spirit.

How fast does obscurity, flatness, and impertinency flow in upon our meditations? 'Tis a difficult task to talk to the purpose, and to put life and perspicuity into our discourses. Collier.

6. Dulness; insipidity; frigidity.

Some of Homer's translators have swelled into fustian, and others sunk into flatness. Pope.

7. The contrary to shrillness or acuteness of sound.

Take two saucers, and strike the edge of the one against the bottom of the other within a pale of water, and you shall find the sound groweth more flat, even while part of the saucer is above the water; but that flatness of sound is joined with a harshness. Bacon.

To FLA'TTEN. v. a. [flatir, Fr. from flat.]

1. To make even or level, without prominence or elevation.
2. To beat down to the ground.

To FLA'TTER. v. a. [flatter, Fr.]

1. To sooth with praises; to please with blandishments; to gratify with servile obsequiousness; to gain by false compliments.

When I tell him he hates flatterers,
He says he does; being then most flattered. Shakesp.
His nature is too noble for the world;
He would not flatter Neptune for his trident,
Or Jove for's power to thunder: his heart's his mouth;
[illegible] his breast forges that his tongue must vent. Shakesp.
He that flattereth his neighbour, spreadeth a net for his feet. Prov. xxix. 5.
He flattereth himself in his own eyes, until his iniquity be found hateful. Psalm xxxvi. 2.
After this way of flattering their willing benefactors out of part, they contrived another of forcing their unwilling neighbours out of all their possessions. Decay of Piety.
Averse alike to flatter or offend. Pope.
I scorn to flatter you or any man. Newton.

2. To praise falsely.

Flatter'd crimes of a licentious age
Provoke our censure. Young.

3. To please; to sooth. This sense is purely Gallick.

A consort of voices supporting themselves by their different parts makes a harmony, pleasingly fills the ears and flatters them. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

4. To raise false hopes.

He, always vacant, always amiable,
Hopes thee, of flatt'ring gales
Unmindful. Milton.

FLA'TTERER. n. s. [from flatter.] One who flatters; a fawner; a wheedler; one who endeavours to gain favour by pleasing falsities.

When I tell him he hates flatterers,
He says he does; being then most flattered. Shak.
Some praises proceed merely of flattery; and if he be an ordinary flatterer, he will have certain common attributes, which may serve every man: if he be a cunning flatterer, he will follow the arch flatterer, which is a man's self. But if he be an impudent flatterer, look wherein a man is conscious to himself that he is most defective, and is most out of countenance in himself, that will the flatterer entitle him to perforce. Bacon.
If we from wealth to poverty descend,
Want gives to know the flatt'rer from the friend. Dryden.
After treating her like a goddess, the husband uses her like a woman: what is still worse, the most abject flatterers degenerate into the greatest tyrants. Addison's Guardian.
The publick should know this: yet whoever goes about to inform them, shall be censured for a flatterer. Swift.

FLA'TTERY. n. s. [from flatter; flatterie, Fr.] False praise; artful obsequiousness; adulation.

Minds, by nature great, are conscious of their greatness,
And hold it mean to borrow aught from flattery. Rowe.
Simple pride for flatt'ry makes demands. Pope.
See how they beg an alms of flattery!
They languish, O! support them with a lye. Young.

FLA'TTISH. adj. [from flat.] Somewhat flat; approaching to flatness.

These are from three inches over to six or seven, and of a flattish shape. Woodward on Fossils.

FLA'TULENCY. n. s. [from flatulent.]

1. Windiness; fulness of wind; turgescence by wind confined.

Vegetable substances contain a great deal of air, which expands itself, producing all the disorders of flatulency. Arbuthnot.

2. Emptiness; vanity; levity; airiness.

Whether most of them are not the genuine derivations of the hypothesis they claim to, may be determined by any that considers the natural flatulency of that airy scheme of notions. Glanville.

FLA'TULENT. adj. [flatulentus, flatus, Lat.]

1. Turgid with air; windy.

Pease are mild and demulcent; but being full of aerial particles are flatulent, when dissolved by digestion. Arbuthnot.
Flatulent tumours are such as easily yield to the pressure of the finger, but readily return, by their elasticity, to a tumid state again. Quincy.

2. Empty; vain; big without substance or reality; puffy.

To talk of knowledge, from those few indistinct representations which are made to our grosser faculties, is a flatulent vanity. Glanville's Scepsis.
How many of these flatulent writers have sunk in their reputation, after seven or eight editions of their works. Dryden.

FLATUO'SITY. n. s. [flatuosité, Fr. from flatus, Lat.] Windiness; fulness of air.

The cause is flatuosity; for wind stirred, moveth to expel; and all purges have in them a raw spirit of wind, which is the principal cause of tension in the stomach and belly. Bacon.

FLA'TUOUS. adj. [from flatus, Lat.] Windy; full of wind.

Rhubarb in the stomach, in a small quantity, doth digest and evercome, being not flatuous nor loathsome; and so sendeth it to the mesentery veins, and, being opening, it helpeth down urine. Bacon.

FLA'TUS. n. s. [Lat.] Wind gathered in any cavities of the body, caused by indigestion and a gross internal perspiration; which is therefore discussed by warm aromaticks. Quincy.

FLA'TWISE. adj. [flat and wise: so it should be written, not flatways.] With the flat downwards; not the edge.

Its posture in the earth was flatwise, and parallel to the site of the stratum in which it was reposited. Woodward on Fossils.

To FLAUNT. v. n.

1. To make a fluttering shew in apparel.

With ivy canopy'd, and interwove
With flaunting honeysuckle. Milton.

These courtiers of applause deny themselves things convenient to flaunt it out, being frequently enough fain to immolate their own desires to their vanity. Boyle.

Here, attir'd beyond our purse, we go,
For useless ornament and flaunting show:
We take on trust, in purple robes to shine,
And poor, are yet ambitious to be fine. Dryden.

You sot, you loiter about alehouses, or flaunt about the streets in your new-guilt chariot, never minding me nor your numerous family. Arbuth.

2. To be hung with something loose and flying. This seems not to be proper: the words flaunt and flutter might with more propriety have changed their places.

Fortune in men has some small diff'rence made;
One flaunts in rags, one flutters in brocade. Pope.

FLAUNT. n. s. Any thing loose and airy.

How would he look to see his work so noble,
Wildly bound up, what would he say! or how
Should I in these my borrow'd flaunts behold
The sternness of his presence! Shakesp.

FLA'VOUR. n. s.

1. Power of pleasing the taste.

They have a certain flavour, at their first appearance, from several accidental circumstances, which they may lose, if not taken early. Addison's Spectator.

2. Sweetness to the smell; odour; fragrance.

Myrtle, orange, and the blushing rose,
With bending heaps, so nigh their bloom disclose,
Each seems to smell the flavour which the other blows. Dryden.

FLA'VOROUS. adj. [from flavour.]

1. Delightful to the palate.

Sweet grapes degen'rate there, and fruits declin'd
From their first flav'rous taste, renounce their kind. Dryden.

2. Fragrant; odorous.

FLAW. n. s. [φλάω to break; flo, Sax. a garment.]

1. A crack or breach in any thing.

This heart shall break into a thousand flaws
Or ere I weep. Shakesp. King Lear.

Wool, new-shorn, being laid casually upon a vessel of verjuice, after some time had drunk up a great part of the verjuice, though the vessel were whole, without any flaw, and had not the bung-hole open. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

We found it exceeding difficult to keep out the air from getting in at any imperceptible hole or flaw. Boyle.

A flaw is in thy ill-bak'd vessel found:
'Tis hollow, and returns a jarring sound. Dryd.

As if great Atlas, from his height,
Should sink beneath his heavenly weight;
And with a mighty flaw the flaming wall, as once it shall,
Should gape immense, and rushing down, o'erwhelm this nether ball. Dryden.

Whether the nymph shall break Diana's law,
Or some frail China-jar receive a flaw. Pope.

He that would keep his house in repair, must attend every little breach or flaw, and supply it immediately, else time alone will bring all to ruin. Swift.

2. A fault; defect; something that weakens or invalidates.

Yet certain though it be, it hath flaws; for that the scriveners and brokers do value unsound men to serve their own turn. Bacon's Essays.

Traditions were a proof alone,
Could we be certain such they were, so known:
But since some flaws in long descents may be,
They make not truth, but probability. Dryden.

And laid her dow'ry out in law,
To null her jointure with a flaw. Hudibras.

Their judgment has found a flaw in what the generality of mankind admires. Addison's Spect.

So many flaws had this vow in its first conception. Atterbury.

3. A sudden gust; a violent blast. [from flo, Lat.] Obsolete.

Being incens'd, he's flint;
As humourous as Winter, and as sudden
As flaws congealed the spring of day. Shakesp. Hen. IV.

Oh, that that earth, which kept the world in awe,
Should patch a wall, t'expel the Winter's flaw. Shakesp. Hamlet.

As a huge fish, laid
Near to the cold weed-gathering shore, is with a north flaw fraid,
Shoots back; so, sent against the ground,
Was foil'd Eurialus. Chapman's Iliad.

Bursting their brazen dungeon, arm'd with ice,
And snow, and hail, and stormy gust, and flaw,
Boreas, and Cæcias, and Argestes loud,
And Thrascias rend the woods, and seas upturn. Milton.

I heard the rack,
As earth and sky would mingle; but myself
Was distant; and these flaws, though mortals fear them,
As dangerous to the pillar'd frame of heav'n,
Or to the earth's dark basis underneath,
Are to the main inconsiderable. Milton's Par. Lost.

4. A tumult; a tempestuous uproar.

And this fell tempest shall not cease to rage,
Until the golden circuit on my head
Do calm the fury of this madbrain'd flaw. Shakesp.

The fort's revolted to the emperor,
The gates are open'd, the portcullis drawn,
And deluges of armies from the town
Came pouring in: I heard the mighty flaw;
When first it broke, the crowding ensigns saw
Which choak'd the passage. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

5. A sudden commotion of mind.

Oh these flaws and starts,
Impostors to true fear, would become
A woman's story at a Winter's fire. Shak. Macbeth.

To FLAW. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To break; to crack; to damage with fissure.

But his flaw'd heart,
Alack, too weak the conflict to support,
'Twixt two extremes of passion, joy and grief,
Burst smilingly. Shakesp. King Lear.

The cup was flawed with such a multitude of little cracks, that it looks like a white, not like a crystalline cup. Boyle.

The brazen cauldrons with the frosts are flaw'd,
The garment stiff with ice, at hearths is thaw'd. Dryden.

2. To break; to violate. Out of use.

France hath flaw'd the league, and hath attach'd
Our merchant's goods. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

FLAW'LESS. adj. [from flaw.] Without cracks; without defects.

A star of the first magnitude, which the more high, more vast, and more flawless, shines only bright enough to make itself conspicuous. Boyle.

FLAWN. n. s. [flena, Sax. flan, Fr. vlaye, Dut.] A sort of custard; a pie baked in a dish.

So many months ere I shall sheer the fleece. Shak.

I am shepherd to another man,
And do not sheer the fleeces that I graze. Shakesp.

Sailors have used every night to hang fleeces of wool on the sides of their ships, towards the water; and they have crushed fresh water out of them in the morning. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

The sheep will prove much to the advantage of the woollen manufacture, by the fineness of the fleeces. Swift.

To FLEECE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To clip the fleece off a sheep.

2. To strip; to pull; to plunder, as a sheep is robbed of his wool.

Courts of justice have a small pension, so that they are tempted to take bribes, and to fleece the people. Addison

FLEECED. adj. [from fleece.] Having fleeces of wool.

As when two rams, stirr'd with ambitious pride,
Fight for the rule of the rich fleeced flock,
Their horned fronts so fierce on either side
Do meet, that with the terror of the shock
Astonied both stand senseless as a block. F. Queen.

FLEE'CY. adj. [from fleece.] Woolly; covered with wool.

Not all the fleecy wealth
That doth enrich these downs is worth a thought
To that my errand. Milton.

From eastern point

The wreath of radiant fire
On flickering Phœbus' front. Shakesp. King Lear.

'Twas ebbing darkness, past the mid' of night,
And Phospher, on the confines of the light,
Promis'd the sun, ere day began to spring;
The tuneful lark already stretch'd her wing,
And flickering on her nest made short essays to sing. Dryden.

At all her stretch her little wings she spread,
And with her feather'd arms embrac'd the dead;
Then flickering to his pallid lips, she strove
To print a kiss, the last essay of love. Dryden.

FLI'ER. n. s. [from fly.]

1. One that runs away; a fugitive; a runaway.

The gates are ope, now prove good seconds;
'Tis for the followers fortune widens them,
Not for the fliers. Shak. Coriolanus.

Now the fliers from and forsakers of their places, carry the parliamentary power along with them. King Charles.

2. That part of a machine which, by being put into a more rapid motion than the other parts, equalizes and regulates the motion of the rest; as in a jack.

The flier, tho't had leaden feet,

That strength he wasted in ignoble flight. Denham

He thinks by flight his mistress must be won,
And claims the prize because he best did run. Dryden.

As eager of the chace, the maid
Beyond the forest's verdant limits stray'd;
Pan saw and lov'd, and, burning with desire,

2. The act of using wings; volation.

For he so swift and nimble was of flight,
That from his lower tract he dar'd to fly
Up to the clouds, and thence with pinions light,
To mount aloft unto the crystal sky. Spenser.

The fury sprang above the Stygian flood;
And on her wicker wings, sublime through night,
She to the Latian palace took her flight. Dryd. Æn.

Winds that tempests brew,
[illegible] through Arabian groves they take their flight,
[illegible] wanton with rich odours, lose their spite. Dryden.

3. Removal from place to place by means of wings.

Ere [illegible] hath flown
His cloyster'd flight. Shakesp. Macbeth.

The fowls shall take their flight away together. 2 Esd. v. 6.

Fowls, by Winter forc'd, forsake the floods,
And wing their hasty flights to happier lands. Dryd.

4. A flock of birds flying together.

Flights of angels wing thee to thy rest. Shakesp.

They take great pride in the feathers of birds, and this they took from their ancestors of the mountains, who were divided into it by the infinite flights of birds that came up to the high grounds. Bacon.

I can at will, doubt not,
Command a table in this wilderness;
And call swift flights of angels ministrant,
Array'd in glory, on my cup to attend. Milton.

5. The birds produced in the same season: as, the harvest flight of pigeons.

6. A volley; a shower; as much shot as is discharged at once.

At the first flight of arrows sent,
Full threescore Scots they slew. Chevy Chace.

Above an hundred arrows discharged on my left hand, pricked me like so many needles; and besides they shot another flight into the air, as we do bombs. Swift.

7. The space past by flying.

8. Heat of imagination; sally of the soul.

Old Pindar's flights by him are reacht,
When on that gale his wings are stretcht. Denham

He shewed all the stretch of fancy at once; and if he has failed in some of his flights, it was because he attempted every thing. Pope

Strange graces still, and stranger flights she had,
Was just not ugly, and was just not mad. Pope.

Trust me, dear! good humour can prevail,
When airs and flights, and screams and scolding fail. Pope.

9. Excursion on the wing.

If there were any certain height where the flights of ambition end, one might imagine that the interests of France were but to conserve its present greatness. Temple.

It is not only the utmost pitch of impiety, but the highest flight of folly, to deride those things. Tillotson.

10. The power of flying.

In my school-days, when I had lost one shaft,
I shot his fellow of the self-same flight
The self-same way Shakesp

FLI'GHTLY. adj. [from flight.]

The flourish of his sober youth,
Was the pride of naked truth. Crashaw.

2. An ostentatious embellishment; ambitious copiousness; far-fetched elegance.

This is a flourish: there follow excellent parables. Bacon.

We can excuse the duty of our knowledge, if we only bestow the flourish of poetry thereon, or those commendatory conceits which popularly set forth the eminence of this creature. Brown.

The apprehension is so deeply rivetted into my mind, that such rhetorical flourishes cannot at all loosen or brush it out. More.

Villanies have not the same countenance, when there are great interests, plausible colours, and flourishes of wit and rhetorick interposed between the sight and the object. L'Estrange.

The so much repeated ornament and flourish of their former speeches was commonly the truest word they spoke, though least believed by them. South's Sermons.

Studious to please the genius of the times,
With periods, points, and tropes he slurs his crimes;
He lards with flourishes his long harangue;
'Tis fine, say'st thou; what, to be prais'd and hang? Dryden.

3. Figures formed by lines curiously or wantonly drawn.

A child with delight looks upon emblems finely drawn and painted, and takes some pleasure in beholding the neat characters and flourishes of a bible curiously printed. Boyle.

They were intended only for ludicrous ornaments of nature, like the flourishes about a great letter that signify nothing, but are made only to delight the eye. More against Atheism.

FLO'URISHER. n. s. [from flourish.] One that is in prime or in prosperity.

They count him of the green-hair'd eld, they may, or in his flow'r;
For not our greatest flourisher can equal him in pow'r. Chapman.

To FLOUT. v. a. [fluyten, Dut. [illegible], Frisick.] To mock; [illegible] with mockery and contempt.

You must flout my insufficiency. Shakesp.

The Norweyan banners flout the sky,
And fan our people cold. Shakesp. Macbeth.

[illegible] mock'd us when he begg'd our voices;
[illegible]inly be flouted us downright. Shak.

She railed at her, that she should be so immodest to write to one she knew would flout her. Shak.

Phillida flouts me. Walton's Angler.

To FLOUT. v. n. To practise mockery; to behave with contempt; to sneer.

Though nature hath given us wit to flout at fortune, hath not fortune sent in this fool to cut off this argument? Shakesp.

With talents well endu'd
To be scurrilous and rude;
When you pertly raise your snout,
Fleer and gibe, and laugh and flout. Swift.

FLOUT. n. s. [from the verb.] A mock; an insult; a word or act of contempt.

He would ask of those that had been at the other's table, Tell truly, was there never a flout or dry blow given? Bacon.

She opened it, and read it out,
With many a smile and leering flout. Hudibras.
Their flouts are barr'd against a bitter flout;
Snarl, if you please; but you shall snarl without.
Dryden.
How many flouts and jeers must I expose myself to by this repentance? How shall I answer such an old acquaintance when he invites me to an intemperate cup? Calamy's Sermons.

FLO'UTER. n. s. [from flout.] One who jeers.

To FLOW. v. n. [flopan, Sax]

1. To run or spread as water.

The god am I, whose yellow water flows
Around these fields, and fattens as it goes. Dryden.
Fields of light and liquid ether flow,
Purg'd from the pond'rous dregs of earth below.
Dryden.
Endless tears flow down in streams. Swift.

2. To run: opposed to standing waters.

With osier floats the standing water strow;
Of massy stones make bridges, if it flow. Dryden.

3. To rise; not to ebb.

This river hath thrice flow'd, no ebb between.
Shakesp.

4. To melt.

Oh that thou would'at rent the heavens, that the mountains might flow down at thy presence.
Is. lxiv. 1.

5. To proceed; to issue.

I'll use that tongue I have: if wit flow from't,
I shall do good. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.
The knowledge drawn from experience is quite of another kind from that which flows from speculation or discourse. South.

6. To glide smoothly without asperity: as, a flowing period.

This discourse of Cyprian, and the flowers of rhetorick in it, shew him to have been of a great wit and flowing eloquence. Hakewill on Providence.

7. To write smoothly; to speak volubly.

Virgil is sweet and flowing in his hexameters.
Dryden.
Did sweeter sounds adorn my flowing tongue
Than ever man pronounc'd, or angels sung. Prior.

8. To abound; to be crowded.

The dry streets flow'd with men. Chapman.

9. To be copious; to be full.

Then shall our names
Be in their flowing cups freshly remember'd.
Shakesp Hen. V.
There every eye with slumb'rous chains she bound,
And dash'd the flowing goblet to the ground.
Pope's Odyssey.

10. To play and waving.

He was clothed [illegible] flowing mantle of green silk, interwoven with flowers. Spectator.

To FLOW. v. a. To overflow; to deluge.

Watering hops is scarce practicable [illegible] you have a stream at hand to flow the ground.
Mortimer's Husbandry

FLOW. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The rise of water; not the ebb.

Some, from the diurnal and annual motion of the earth, endeavour to solve the flows and motions of these seas, illustrating the same by water in a bowl, that rises or falls according to the motion of the vessel. Brown's Vulg. Err.
The ebb of tides, and their mysterious flow,
We as art's elements shall understand. Dryden.

2. A sudden plenty or abundance.

The noble power of suffering bravely is as far above that of enterprising greatly, as an unblemished conscience and inflexible resolution are above an accidental flow of spirits, or a sudden tide of blood. Pope.

3. A stream of diction; volubility of tongue.

Teaching is not a flow of words, nor the draining of an hourglass; but an effectual procuring that a man know something which he knew not before, or to know it better. South.

FLO'WER. n. s. [fleur, Fr. flos, flores, Lat.]

1. The part of a plant which contains the seeds.

Such are reckoned perfect flowers which have petals, a stamen, apex and stylus; and whatever flower wants either of these is reckoned imperfect. Perfect flowers are divided into simple ones, which are not composed of other smaller, and which usually have but one single style; and compounded, which consist of many flosculi, all making but one flower. Simple flowers are monopetalous, which have the body of the flower all of one entire leaf, though sometimes cut or divided a little way into many seeming petals, or leaves; as in borage, bugloss: or polypetalous, which have distinct petals, and those falling off singly, and not altogether, as the seeming petals of monopetalous flowers always do: but those are further divided into uniform and difform flowers: the former have their right and left hand parts, and the forward and backward parts all alike; but the difform have no such regularity, as in the flowers of sage and deadnettle. A monopetalous difform flower is likewise further divided into, first, semi-fistular, whose upper part resembles a pipe cut off obliquely, as in the arilostochia: 2d, labiate; and this either with one lip only, as in the acanthum and scordium, or with two lips, as in the far greater part of the labiate flowers: and here the upper lip is sometimes turned upwards, and so turns the convex part downwards, as in the chamæcissus; but most commonly the upper lip is convex above, and turns the hollow part down to its fellow below, and represents a kind of helmet, or monkshood; and from thence these are frequently called galeate, cuculiate, and galericulate flowers; and in this form are the flowers of the lamium, and most verticillate plants. Sometimes the lamium is intire, and sometimes jagged or divided. 3d, Corniculate; that is, such hollow flowers as have on their upper part a kind of spur, or little horn, as the linaria, delphinum, &c. and the carniculum, or calcar, is always impervious at the tip or point. Compounded flowers are, first, discous, or discoidal; that is, whose flosculi are set so close, thick, and even, as to make the surface of the flower plain and flat, which, because of its round form, will be like a discus; which disk is sometimes radiated, when there is a row of petals standing round in the disk, like the points of a star, as in the matricaria, chamæmelum, &c and sometimes naked, having no such radiating leaves round the limb of its disk, as in the tanacetum: 2d, planifolious, which is composed of plain flowers, set together in circular rows round the centre, and whose face is usually indented, notched, and jagged, as the hieracia. 3d, Fistular, which is compounded of long hollow little flowers, like pipes, all divided into large jags at the ends. Imperfect flowers, because they want the petals, are called stamineous, apetalous, and capilaceous; and those which hang pendulous by fine threads, like the juli, are by Tournefort called amentaceous, and we call them cats-tail. The term campaniformis is used for such as are in the shape of a bell, and infundibuliformis for such as are in the form of a funnel. Miller.

Good men's lives
[illegible] before the flowers in their caps,
Dying or are they sicken. Shakesp. Macbeth.
With flowers woven tresses torn,
The nymphs in twilight shade of tangled thickets mourn. Milton.
Beauteous flowers why do we spread
Upon the monuments of the dead. Cowley.
Though the same sun with all-diffusive rays
Blush in the rose, and in the diamond blaze,
We praise the stronger effort of his power,
And always set the gem above the flower. Pope.
If the blossom of the [illegible] be of most importance, we call it a flower; such are daisies, tulips, and carnations. Watts.

2. An ornament; an embellishment.

The nomination of persons to these places being so prime and inseparable a flower of his crown, he would reserve to himself. Clarendon.
This discourse of Cyprian, and the fluellent flowers of rhetorick in it, shew him to have been a sweet and powerful orator. Hakewill.
Truth needs no flow'rs of speech. Pope.

3. The prime; the flourishing part.

Alas! young man, your days can ne'er be long:
In flow'r of age you perish for a song. Pope.

4. The edible part of corn; the meal.

The bread I would have in flower, so as it might be baked still to serve their necessary want.
Spenser.
I can make my audit up, that all
From me do back receive the flow'r of all,
And leave me but the bran. Shakesp.
The flowers of grains, mixed with water, will make a sort of glue. Arbuthnot on Aliments.
But by thy care twelve urns of wine be fill'd,
Next these in worth, and firm those urns be seal'd;
Be twice ten measures of the choicest flour
Prepar'd, ere yet descends the evening hour.
Pope's Odyssey.

5. The most excellent or valuable part of any thing; quintessence.

The choice and flower of all things profitable the Psalms do more briefly contain, and more movingly express, by reason of their poetical form. Hooker.
Thou hast slain
The flower of Europe for his chivalry. Shakesp.
The French monarchy is exhausted of its bravest subjects: the flower of the nation is consumed in its wars. Addison.

6. That which is most distinguished for any thing valuable.

He is not the flower of courtesy, but, I warrant him, as gentle as a lamb. Shakesp.

FLO'WER de Luce, n. s. A bulbous iris.

Miller specifies thirty-four species of this plant; and among them the Persian flower de luce is greatly esteemed for the sweetness and beauty of its variegated flowers, which are in perfection in February, or the beginning of March.
Crop'd are the flower de luces in your arms:
Of England's coat one half is cut away. Shak.
The iris is the flower de luce. Peacham.

To FLOWER. v. n. [fleurir, Fr. or from the noun.]

1. To be in flower; to be in blossom; to bloom; to put forth flowers.

So forth they marched in this goodly sort,
To take the solace of the open air,
And in fresh flowering fields themselves to sport.
Fairy Queen.
Sacred hill, whose head full high,
Is, as it were, for endless memory
Of that dear Lord, who oft thereon was found,
For ever with a flow'ring garland crown'd.
Fairy Queen.
Then herbs of every leaf, that sudden flower'd,
Op'ning their various colours. Milton.
Mark well the flow'ring almonds in the wood,
If od'rous blooms the bearing branches load.
Dryd. Georg.
To leafless shrubs the flow'ring palms succeed,
And od'rous myrtle to the noisome weed. Pope.

2. To be in the prime; to flourish.

Whilome in youth, when flower'd my youthful spring,
Like swallow swift, I wandered here and there;
For heat of heedless lust me did so sting,
That I of doubted danger had no fear.
Spenser.
This cause de sin'd me all my flow'ring youth,
Within a loathsome dungeon there to pine.
Shakesp. Henry VI.

3. To froth; to ferment; to mantle, as new bottled beer.

Those above the water were best, and that beer did flower a little; whereas that under water did not, though it were fresh. Bacon.

An extreme clarification doth spread the spirits so smooth that they become dull, and the drink dead, which ought to have a little flowering. Bacon's Natural History.

4. To come as cream from the surface.

If you can accept of these few observations, which have flowered off, and are, as it were, the burnishing of many studious and contemplative years, I here give you them to dispose of. Milton.

To FLO'WER. v. a. [from the noun.] To adorn with fictitious or imitated flowers.

FLO'WERAGE. n. s. [from flower.] Store of flowers. Dict.

FLO'WERET. n. s. [fleuret, Fr.] A flower; a small flower.

Sometimes her head she fondly would aguise
With gaudy garlands, or fresh flow'rets dight,
About her neck, or rings of rushes plight. F. Q.

That same dew, which sometimes on the buds
Was wont to swell, like round and orient pearls,
Stood now within the pretty flow'ret's eyes,
Like tears that did their own disgrace bewail. Shakesp.

So to the sylvan lodge
They came, that like Pomona's arbour smil'd,
With flow'rets deck'd, and fragrant smells. Milt.

Then laughs the childish year with flow'rets crown'd,
And lavishly perfumes the fields around;
But no substantial nourishment receives,
Infirm the stalks, unsolid are the leaves. Dryden.

FLO'WERGARDEN. n. s. [flower and garden.] A garden in which flowers are principally cultivated.

Observing that this manure produced flowers in the field, I made my gardener try those shells in my flowergarden, and I never saw better carnations or flowers. Mortimer's Husbandry.

FLO'WERINESS. n. s. [from flowery.]

1. The state of abounding in flowers.
2. Floridness of speech.

FLO'WERINGBUSH. n. s. A plant.

FLO'WERY. adj. [from flower.] Full of flowers; adorned with flowers real or fictitious.

My mother Circe, with the syrens there,
Amidst the flow'ry kirtled Naiades. Milton.

Day's harbinger
Comes dancing from the East, and leads with her
The flow'ry May, who from her green lap throws
The yellow cowslip and the pale primrose. Milton.

O'er his fair limbs a flow'ry vest he threw. Pope.

To her the shady grove, the flow'ry field,
The streams and fountains no delight could yield. Pope.

FLO'WINGLY. adv. [from flow.] With volubility; with abundance.

FLOWK. n. s. [fluke, Scott.] A flounder; the name of a fish.

Amongst these the flowk, sole, and plaice, follow the tide up into the fresh waters. Carew.

FLO'WKWORT. n. s. The name of a plant.

FLOWN. Participle of fly, or flee, they being confounded; properly of fly.

1. Gone away.

For those,
Appointed to sit there, had left their charge,
Flown to the upper world. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Where, my deluded sense! was reason flown?
Where the high majesty of David's throne? Prior.

2. Puffed; inflated; elate.

And when night
Darkens the streets, then wander forth the sons
Of Belial, flown with insolence and wine. Milton.

Is this a bridal or a friendly feast?
Or from your deeds I rightly may divine,
Unseemly flown with insolence or wine. Pope.

FLU'CTUANT. adj. [fluctuans, Lat.] Wavering; uncertain.

To be longing for this thing to-day, and for that thing to-morrow; to change likings for loathings, and to stand wishing and hankering at a venture, how is it possible for any man to be at rest in this fluctuant wandering humour and opinion. L'Estrange.

To FLU'CTUATE. v. n. [fluctuo, Lat.]

1. To roll to and again, as water in agitation.

The fluctuating fields of liquid air,
With all the curious meteors hov'ring there,
And the wide regions of the land, proclaim
The Pow'r Divine, that rais'd the mighty frame. Blackmore.

2. To float backward and forward, as with the motion of water.
3. To move with uncertain and hasty motion.

The tempter
New parts puts on; and, as to passion mov'd,
Fluctuates disturb'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

4. To be in an uncertain state; to feel sudden vicissitudes.

As the greatest part of my estate has hitherto been of an unsteady and volatile nature, either tost upon seas, or fluctuating in funds, it is now fixed and settled in substantial acres and tenements. Addison.

5. To be irresolute; to be undetermined.

FLUCTUA'TION. n. s. [fluctuatio, Lat. fluctuation, Fr. from fluctuate.]

1. The alternate motion of the water.

Fluctuations are but motions subservient, which winds, storms, shores, shelves, and every interjacency irregulates. Brown.

They were caused by the impulses and fluctuation of water in the bowels of the earth. Wood.

2. Uncertainty; indetermination.

It will not hinder it from making a proselyte of a person, that loves fluctuation of judgment little enough to be willing to be eased of it by any thing but errour. Boyle.

FLUE. n. s. [A word of which I know not the etymology, unless it be derived from flew of fly.]

1. A small pipe or chimney to convey air, heat, or smoke.
2. Soft down or fur, such as may fly in the wind.

FLUE'LLIN. n. s. The herb SPEEDWELL.

FLU'ENCY. n. s. [from fluent.]

1. The quality of flowing: smoothness; freedom from harshness or asperity.

Fluency of numbers, and most expressive figures for the poet, morals for the serious, and pleasantries for admirers of points of wit. Garth.

2. Readiness; copiousness; volubility.

Our publick liturgy must be cashiered, the better to please those men who gloried in their extemporary vein and fluency. King Charles.

We reason with such fluency and fire,
The beaux we baffle, and the learned tire. Tickel.

The common fluency of speech in many men, and most women, is owing to a scarcity of matter, and a scarcity of words; for whoever is master of language, and hath a mind full of ideas, will be apt, in speaking, to [illegible] upon the choice of both. Swift.

3. Affluence; abundance. This sense is obsolete.

Those who grow old in fluency and ease,
Behold him tost on seas. Sandys.

God riches and renown to men imparts,
Even all they wish; and yet their narrow hearts
Cannot so great a fluency receive,
But their fruition to a stranger leave. Sandys.

FLU'ENT. adj. [fluens, Lat.]

1. Liquid.

It is not malleable; but yet is not fluent, but stupified. Bacon.

2. Flowing; in motion; in flux.

Motion being a fluent thing, and one part of its duration being independent upon another, it doth not follow that because any thing moves this moment, it must do so the next. Ray on the Creation.

3. Ready; copious; voluble.

Those have some natural dispositions, which have better grace in youth than in age, such as is a fluent and luxurious speech. Bacon.

I shall lay before you all that's within me,
And with most fluent utterance. Denham's Sophy.

FLU'ENT. n. s. Stream; running water.

Confiding in their hands, that sed'lous strive
To cut th' outrageous fluent; in this distress,
Ev'n in the sight of death. Philips.

FLU'ENTLY. adv. [from fluent.] With ready flow; volubly; readily; without obstruction or difficulty.

FLU'ID. adj. [fluidus, Lat. fluide, Fr.] Having parts easily separable; not solid.

Or serve they as a flow'ry verge to bind
The fluid skirts of that same wat'ry cloud,
Lest it again dissolve, and show'r the earth? Milt.

If particles slip easily, and are of a fit size to be agitated by heat, and the heat is big enough to keep them in agitation, the body is fluid; and if it be apt to stick to things, it is humid. Newton.

FLU'ID. n. s.

1. Any thing not solid.
2. [In physick.] Any animal juice; as the blood.

Consider how luxury hath introduced new diseases, and with them, not improbably, altered the whole course of the fluids. Arbuthnot.

FLUI'DITY. n. s. [fluidité, Fr. from fluid.] The quality in bodies opposite to stability; want of coherence between the parts.

Heat promotes fluidity very much, by diminishing the tenacity of bodies: it makes many bodies fluid, which are not fluid in cold, and increases the fluidity of tenacious liquids; as of oil, balsam, and honey; and thereby decreases their resistance. Newton.

A disease opposite to this spissitude is too great fluidity. Arbuthnot.

FLU'IDNESS. n. s. [from fluid.] That quality in bodies opposite to stability.

What if we should say that fluidness and stability depends so much upon the texture of the parts, that by the change of that texture the same parts may be made to constitute either a fluid or a dry body, and that permanently too? Boyle.

FLU'MMERY. n. s. A kind of food made by coagulation of wheatflower or oatmeal.

Milk and flummery [illegible] Locke.

FLUNG. participle and preterite of fling. Thrown; cast.

Several statues the Roman themselves flung into the river, when they would revenge themselves. Addison on Italy.

FLUOR. n. s. [Lat.]

1. A fluid state.

The particles of fluids, which do not cohere too strongly, and are of such a smallness as renders them most susceptible of those agitations which keep liquors in a fluor, are most easily separated and rarefied into vapours. Newton's Opt.

2. Catamenia.

FLU'RRY. n. s.

1. A gust or storm of wind; a hasty blast.

The boat was overset by a sudden flurry from the North. Swift.

2. Hurry; a violent commotion.

To FLUSH. v. n. [fluysen, Dut. to flow; flus, or flux, Fr.]

1. To flow with violence.
The pulse of the heart he attributes to an ebullition and sudden expansion of the blood in the ventricles, after the manner of the milk, which, being heated to such a degree, doth suddenly, and all at once, flush up and run over the vessel. Ray.
It flushes violently out of the cock for about a quart, and then stops. Mortimer's Husbandry
2. To come in haste.
If the place but affords
Any store of lucky birds,
As I make 'em to flush,
Each owl out of his bush. Ben Jonson's Owls.
3. To glow in the skin; to produce a colour in the face by a sudden afflux of blood. It is properly used of a sudden or transient heat of countenance; not of a settled complexion.
Ere yet the salt of most unrighteous tears
Had left the flushing in her gauled eyes,
She married. Shakesp. Hamlet.
Thus Eve with count'nance blithe her story told,
But in her cheek distemper flushing glow'd. Milt
What can be more significant than the sudden flushing and confusion of a blush? Collier.
What means that lovely fruit? What means, alas!
That blood, which flushes guilty in your face? Dry.
At once, array'd
In all the colours of the flushing year,
The garden glows. Thomson's Spring.
4. To shine suddenly. Obsolete.
A flake of fire that flushing in his beard,
Him all amaz'd. Spenser.

The glowing dames of Zama's royal court
Have faces flush'd with more exalted charms.
Addu. Cato.
Some court, or secret corner seek,
Nor flush with shame the passing virgin's cheek.
Gay's Triv.
2. To elate; to elevate; to give the appearance of sudden joy.
As prosperous people, flushed with great victories and successes, are rarely known to confine their joys within the bounds of moderation and innocence. Atterbury's Sermons.

FLUSH. adj.
1. Fresh; full of vigour.
He took my father grossly, full of bread,
With all his crimes broad blown, and flush as May;
And how his audit stands, who knows, save Heav'n? Shakesp.
I love to wear cloths that are flush,
Not prefacing old rags with plush. Cleaveland.
2. Affluent; abounding. A cant word.
Lord Strut was not very flush in ready, either [illegible] law or clear old debts; neither could he Arbuthnot.

FLUSH. n. s.
1. Afflux; sudden impulse; violent flow. This is commonly corrupted to flash: as, a flash of water.
Never had any man such a loss, cries a bowler, in the flush of his extravagancies for a dead wife. L'Estrange.
The pulse of the arteries is not only caused by the pulsation of the heart, driving the blood through them in manner of a wave or flush, but by the coats of the arteries themselves. Ray.
Success may give him a present flush of joy; but when the short transport is over, the apprehension of losing succeeds to the care of acquiring. Rogers's Sermons.
2. Cards all of a sort.

To FLU'STER. v. a. [from To flush.] To make hot and rosy with drinking; to make half drunk.
Three lads of Cyprus, noble swelling spirits,
Have I to-night flustered with flowing cups,
And they watch too Shakesp. Othello.

FLUTE. n. s. [fluste, flute, Fr. flayte, Dut.]
1. A musical pipe; a pipe with stops for the fingers.
Th' oars were silver,
Which to the tune of flutes kept stroke. Shakesp.
The soft complaining flute
In dying notes discovers
The woes of hopeless lovers,
Whose dirge is whisper'd by the warbling lute.
Dryden.
2. A channel or furrow in a pillar, like the concave of a flute split.

To FLUTE. v. a. To cut columns into hollows.

To FLUTTER. v. n. [flotenan, Sax. flotter, Fr.]
1. To take short flights with great agitation of the wings.
As an eagle stirreth up her nest, fluttereth over her young, and spreadeth abroad her wings, so the Lord alone did lead him. Deut.
Think you've an angel by the wings;
One that gladly will be nigh,
To wait upon each morning-sigh;
To flutter in the balmy air
Of your well perfumed pray'r. Crashaw.
They fed, and, flutt'ring, by degrees withdrew.
Dryden.
2. To move about with great show and bustle without consequence.
Excess muddles the best wit, and only makes it flutter and froth high. Grew.
No rag, no scrap of all the beau or wit,
That once so flutter'd, and that once so writ. Pope.
3. To be moved with quick vibrations or undulations.
Ye spirits! to your charge repair;
The flutt'ring fan be Zephyretta's care. Pope.
They the tall mast above the vessel rear,
Or teach the flutt'ring sail to float in air. Pope's Od.
4. To be in agitation; to move irregularly: to be in a state of uncertainty.
The relation being brought him what a glorious victory was got, and how long we fluttered upon the wings of doubtful success, he was not surprised. Howel's Vocal Forest.
It is impossible that men should certainly discover the agreement or discernment of ideas, whilst their thoughts flutter about, or stick only in sounds of doubtful signification. Locke.
Esteem we these, my friends! event and chance,
Produc'd by atoms from their flutt'ring dance!
Prior.
His thoughts are very fluttering and wandering, and cannot be fixed attentively to a few ideas successively. Watts.

To FLU'TTER. v. a.
1. To drive in disorder; like a flock of birds suddenly roused.
Like an eagle in a dovecoat, I
Flutter'd your Volscians in Corioli. Shakesp.
2. To hurry the mind.
3. To disorder the position of any thing.

FLU'TTER. n. s. [from the verb.]
1. Vibration; undulation; quick and irregular motion.

selves longer in, and not flown so dangerously abroad before the feathers of the cause had been grown. Hooker.

2. To pass through the air.

Man is born unto trouble, as the sparks fly upward. Job, v.

3. To pass away, with the idea of swiftness or escape.

Ev'n a romance, a tune, a rhime,
Help thee to pass the tedious time,
Which else would on thy hand remain;
Though flown, it ne'er looks back again. Prior.

4. To pass swiftly.

The scouts with flying speed
Return, and through the city spread the news. Dry.
Earth rolls back beneath the flying steed. Pope.

5. To move with rapidity.

As striplings whip the top for sport,
On the smooth pavement of an empty court,
The wooden engine flies and whirls about. Dryd

6. To part with violence

Glad to catch this good occasion,
Most thoroughly to be winnow'd, where my chaff
And corn shall fly asunder. Shakesp.
He bassas heads, to save his own, made fly;
And now, the sultan to preserve, must die. Waller.

7. To break; to shiver; to burst asunder with a sudden explosion.

And soft humanity, that from rebellion fled. Dry.
He oft desir'd to fly from Israel's throne,
And live in shades with her and love alone. Prior.
I'll fly from shepherds, flocks, and flow'ry plains;
From shepherds, flocks, and plains I may remove,
Forsake mankind, and all the world but love. Pope.

9. To fly at. To spring with violence upon; to fall on suddenly.

A servant that he bred, thrill'd with remorse,
Oppos'd against the act, bending his sword
To his great master; who, thereat enrag'd,
Flew on him, and amongst them fell'd him dead.
Shakesp.
Though the dogs have never seen the dog-killer, yet they will come forth, and fly at him.
Bacon's Nat. Hist.
No honour, no fortune, can keep a man from being miserable, when an enraged conscience shall fly at him, and take him by the throat. South.
This is an age that flies at all learning, and enquires especially into faults. South.

10. To fly in the face. To insult.

This would discourage any man from doing you good, when you will either neglect him, or fly in his face; and he must expect only danger to himself. Swift's Drapier's Letters.

11. To fly in the face. To act in defiance.

Fly in nature's face!
—But how, if nature fly in my face first?
—Then nature's the aggressor. Dryden.

12. To fly off. To revolt.

Deny to speak to me! They're sick, they're weary,
They have travell'd all the night! mean fetches;
The images of revolt and flying off. Shakesp.
The traytor Syphax

13. To fly out. To burst into passion.

How easy is a noble spirit discern'd,
From harsh and sulphurous matter that flies out
In contumelies, makes a noise, and stinks.
Ben Jons. Catil.
Passion is apt to ruffle, and pride will fly out into contumely and neglect. Collier of Friendship.

14. To fly out. To break out into licence.

You use me like a courser spurr'd and rein'd:
If I fly out, my fierceness you command. Dryd.
Papists, when unopposed, fly out into all the pageantries of worship, but when they are hard pressed by arguments, lie close intrenched behind the council of Trent. Dryden.

15. To fly out. To start violently from any direction.

All bodies, moved circularly, have a perpetual endeavour to recede from the centre, and every moment would fly out in right lines, if they were not restrained. Bentley's Sermons.

16. To let fly. To discharge.

The noisy culverin, o'ercharg'd, lets fly,
And bursts, unaiming, in the rended sky. Granv.

17. To be light and unincumbered: as a flying camp.

To FLY. v. a.

1. To shun; to avoid; to decline.

Love like a shadow flies, when substance love pursues;
Pursuing that which flies, and flying what pursues.
Shakesp.
O Jove, I think
Foundations fly the wretched; such I mean,
Where they should be relieved. Shakesp.
If you fly physick in health altogether, it will be too strange for your body when you shall need it. Bacon's Essays.
O whither shall I run, or which way fly
The sight of this so horrid spectacle! Milt.

2. To refuse association with.

Sleep flies the wretch; or when with cares oppress,
And his toss'd limbs are weary'd into rest,
Then dreams invade. Dryden's Juvenal.
Nature flies him like enchanted ground. Dryden

3. To quit by flight.

Dedalus, to fly the Cretan shore,
His heavy limbs on jointed pinions bore,
The first who sail'd in air. Dryden's Æn.

4. To attack by a bird of prey.

If a man can tame this monster, and with her fly other ravening fowl, and kill them, it is somewhat worth. Bacon.

5. It is probable that flew was originally the preterite of fly, when it signified volation, and fled when it signified escape: flown should be confined likewise to volation; but these distinctions are now confounded. I know not any book except the Scriptures in which fly and flee are carefully kept separate.

FLY. n. s. [fleoge, Sax.]

1. A small winged insect of many species.

As flies to wanton boys, are we to th' gods;
They kill us for their sport. Shakesp.

In their conflicts with sin they have been so often foiled, that they now despair of ever getting the day. Calamy's Sermons.
Virtue, disdain, despair, I oft have try'd;
And, foil'd, have with new arms my foe defy'd.
Dryden.
But I, the consort of the thunderer,
Have wag'd a long and unsuccessful war;
With various arts and arms in vain have toil'd,
And by a mortal man at length am foil'd. Dryd.

2. [Fouiller, Fr.] To blunt; to dull.
When light-wing'd toys
Of feather'd Cupid foil with wanton dulness,
My speculative and offic'd instruments. Shakesp.

3. To defeat; to puzzle.
Whilst I am following one character, I am cross'd in my way by another, and put up such a variety of odd creatures in both sexes, that they foil the scent of one another, and puzzle the chace. Addison.

FOIL. n. s. [from the verb.]
1. A defeat; a miscarriage; an advantage gained without a complete conquest.
We of thy cunning had no diffidence;
One sudden foil shall never breed distrust. Shak.
Whosoever overthroweth his mate in such sort, as that either his back, or the one shoulder, and contrary heel do touch the ground, shall be accounted to give the fall: if he be endangered, and make a narrow escape, it is call'd a foil. Carew.
So after many a foil the tempter proud,
Renewing fresh assaults, amidst his pride,
Fell whence he stood to see his victor fall. Milt.

Lest foistiness make it for table unmeet. Tusser.

FO'ISTY. adj. [See FUSTY.] Mouldy; fusty.

FOLD. n. s. [ꝑalæd, ꝑalð, Sax.]
1. The ground in which sheep are confined.
His eyes he open'd, and beheld a field
Part arable and tilth; whereon were sheaves
New reap'd; the other part, sheepwalks and folds. Milton.
In thy book record their groans,
Who were thy sheep, and in their ancient fold
Slain. Milton.
2. The place where sheep are housed.
Time drives the flocks from field to fold,
When rivers rage and rocks grow cold;
And Philomel becometh dumb,
And all complain of cares to come. Raleigh.
3. The flock of sheep.
And this you see I scarcely drag along,
Who yeaning on the rocks has left her young,
The hope and promise of my failing fold. Dryden.
4. A limit; a boundary.
Secure from meeting, they're distinctly roll'd;
Nor leave their seats, and pass the dreadful fold. Creech.
5. [From ꝑilb, Sax.] A double; a complication; an involution; one part added to another; one part doubled upon another.
She in this trice of time
Commits a thing so monstrous, to dismantle

The ancient Egyptian mummies were shrowded in a number of folds of linen, besmeared with gums. Bacon's Natural History.
Not with indented wave, the serpent then
Prone on the ground, as since; but on his rear
Circular base of rising folds, that tower'd
Fold above fold, a surging maze! Milton.
Let the draperies be nobly spread upon the body, and let the folds be large; the parts should be often traversed by the flowing of the folds. Dryd.
With fear and wonder seiz'd, the crowd beholds
The gloves of death with seven distinguish'd folds
Of tough bull hides. Dryden's Virg. Æn.
The inward coat of a lion's stomach has stronger folds than a human, but in other things not much different. Arbuthnot.
6. From the foregoing signification is derived the use of fold in composition. Fold signifies the same quantity added: as two fold, twice the quantity; twenty fold, twenty times repeated.
But other fell into good ground, and brought forth fruit; some an hundred fold, some sixty fold, some thirty fold. Matt.
At last appear
Hell bounds high reaching to the horrid roof,
And thrice three fold the gates: three folds were brass,
Three iron, three of adamantine rock. Milton.
Their martyr'd blood and ashes sow
O'er all th' Italian fields, where still doth sway
The triple tyrant; that from these may grow
A hundred fold. Milton.

To FOLD. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To shut sheep in the fold.
The star that bids the shepherd fold,
Now the top of heav'n doth hold. Milton.
We see that the folding of sheep helps ground, as well by their warmth as by their compost. Bacon.
She in pens his flocks will fold,
And then produce her dairy store,
With wine to drive away the cold,
And unbought dainties of the poor. Dryden's Hor.
2. [ꝑalban, Sax.] To double; to complicate.
As a vesture shalt thou fold them up. Heb. i 12.

FOLIA'TION. n. s. [foliatio, folium, Lat.]
1. The act of beating into thin leaves.
2. Foliation is one of the parts of the flower, being the collection of those fugacious coloured leaves called petala, which constitute the compass of the flower: and sometimes guard the fruit which succeeds the foliation, as in apples and pears, and sometimes stand within it, as in cherries and apricots; for these, being tender and pulpous, and coming forth in the Spring, would be injured by the weather, if they were not lodged up within their flowers. Quincy.

FO'LIATURE. n. s. [from folium, Lat.] The state of being hammered into leaves. Dict.

FO'LIO. n. s. [in folio, Lat.] A large book of which the pages are formed by a sheet of paper once doubled.

Plumbinus and Plumeo made less progress in knowledge, though they had read over more folios. Watts on the Mind.

FO'LIOMORT. adj. [folium mortuum, Lat.] A dark yellow; the colour of a leaf faded: vulgarly called philomot.

A flinty pebble was of a dark green colour, and the exteriour cortex of a foliomort colour. Woodward on Fossils.

FOLK. n. s. [folc, Sax. volk, Dut.; it is properly a noun collective, and has no plural but by modern corruption.]

1. People, in familiar language.

Never troubling him, either with asking questions, or finding fault with his melancholy, but rather fitting to his dolon dolorous discourses of their own and other folk's misfortune. Sidney.

Dorilaus having married his sister, had his marriage in short time blest, for so are folk wont to say, how unhappy so ever the children after grow, with a son. Sidney.

When with greatest art he spoke,
You'd think he talk'd like other folk;
For all a rhetorician's rules
Teach nothing but to name his tools. Hudibras.

2. Nations; mankind.

Thou shalt judge the folk righteously, and govern the nations upon earth. Psalms

3. Any kind of people as discriminated from others.

The river thrice hath flow'd, no ebb between;
And the old folk, time's doting chronicles,
Say it did so a little time before. Shakesp.

Anger is a kind of baseness: as it appears well in the weakness of children, women, old folks, and sick folks. Bacon.

4. It is now used only in familiar or burlesque language.

Old good man Dobson of the green,
Remembers he the tree has seen,
And goes with folks to shew the sight. Swift.

He walk'd and wore a threadbare cloak;
He din'd and supp'd at charge of other folk. Swift.

FO'LKMOTE. n. s. [from folk and mote.]

Those hills were appointed for two special uses, and built by two several nations: the one is that which you call folkmotes, built by the Saxons, and signifies in the Saxon a meeting of folk. Spenser on Ireland.

FO'LLICLE. n. s. [folliculus, Lat.]

1. A cavity in any body with strong coats.

Although there be no eminent and circular follicle, no round bag or vesicle, which long containeth this humour; yet is there a manifest receptacle of choler from the liver into the guts. Brown.

2. Follicle is a term in botany, signifying seed-vessels, capsula seminalis, or case, which some fruits and seeds have over them; as that of the alkengi, siliculares, &c. Quincy.

To FO'LLOW. v. a. [folzian, Sax.; volgen, Dut.]

1. To go after; not before, or side by side.

I had rather, forsooth, go before you like a man, than follow him like a dwarf. Shakesp.

Him and all his train
Follow'd in bright procession, to behold
Creation, and the wonders of his might. Milton.

What could I do,
But follow strait, invisibly thus led? Milton.

2. To pursue as an enemy; to chase.

Where ranks fell thickest was indeed the place
To seek Sebastian, through a track of death;
I follow'd him by groans of dying foes. Dryd

3. To accompany; not to forsake.

Yet doubt not but in valley and in plain
God is as here, and will be found alike
Present, and of his presence many a sign
Still following thee, still compassing thee round
With goodness and paternal love, his face
Express, and of his steps the track divine. Milt.

Up he rode,
Follow'd with acclamation and the sound
Symphonious of ten thousand harps that tun'd
Angelic harmonies. Milton.

4. To attend as a dependant.

And the three eldest sons of Jesse went and followed Saul to the battle. I. Samuel.

Let not the muse then flatter lawless sway,
Nor follow fortune where she leads the way. Pope.

5. To go after, as a teacher.

Not yielding over to old age his country delights, he was at that time following a merlin Sidney.

Some pious tears the pitying hero paid,
And follow'd with his eyes the fleeting shade.
Dryden's Æneid.

We follow fate, which does too fast pursue. Dryden.

6. To succeed in order of time.

Such follow him as shall be register'd,
Part good, part bad, of bad the longer scroll. Milton.

Signs following signs, lead on the mighty year. Pope.

7. To be consequential in argument, as effects to causes.

I laugh, when those who at the spear are bold
And vent'rous, if that fail them, shrink and fear
What yet they know must follow, to endure
Exile, or ignominy, or bonds, or pain. Milton.

8. To imitate; to copy as a pupil; or to be of an opinion or party.

Where Rome keepeth that which is ancienter and better, others, whom we much more affect, leaving it for newer, and changing it for worse, we had rather follow the perfections of them whom we like not, than in defects resemble them whom we love. Hooker.

Ill patterns are sure to be followed more than good rules. Locke.

9. To obey; to observe, as a guide or direction.

If all who do not follow oral tradition as their only rule of faith are out of the church, then all who follow the council of Trent are no christians. Tillotson.

Most men admire
Virtue, who follow not her laws. Par. Regain'd.

Fair virtue, should I follow thee,
I should be naked and alone,
For thou art not in company,
And scarce art to be found in one. Evelyn.

10. To pursue as an object of desire.

Follow peace with all men. Hebrews

Follow not that which is evil. John.

11. To confirm by new endeavours; to keep up indefatigably.

They bound themselves to his laws and obedience; and in case it had been followed upon them, as it should have been, they should have been reduced to perpetual civility. Spenser.

12. To attend to; to be busied with.

He that undertaketh and followeth other men's business for gain, shall fall into suits. Ecclus.

To FO'LLOW. v. n.

1. To come after another.

The famine shall follow close after you. Jer.

Welcome all that lead or follow
To the temple of Apollo. Ben Jonson.

2. To attend servilely.

Such smiling rogues as these sooth every passion,
That in the nature of their lords rebels;
As knowing nought, like dogs, but following.
Shakesp. King Lear.

3. To be posteriour in time.

4. To be consequential, as effect to cause.

If the neglect or abuse of liberty to examine what would really and truly make for his happiness mislead him, the miscarriages that follow on it must be imputed to his own election. Locke.

To tempt them to do what is neither for their own nor the good of those under their care, great mischiefs cannot but follow. Locke.

5. To be consequential, as inference to premisses.

Though there are or have been sometimes dwarfs, and sometimes giants in the world; yet it does not follow that there must be such in every age, nor in every country. Temple.

Dangerous doctrine must necessarily follow, from making all political power to be nothing else but Adam's paternal power. Locke.

6. To continue endeavours; to persevere

Then shall we know, if we follow on to know the Lord. Hosea

FO'LLOWER. n. s. [from follow.]

1. One who comes after another; not before him, or side by side.

Little gallant, you were wont to be a follower; but now you are a leader; whether had you rather lead mine eyes, or eye your master's heels? Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

No stop, no stay, but clouds of sand arise,
Spurn'd and cast backward on the follower's eyes. Dryden.

2. One who observes a guide or leader.

The understanding that should be eyes to the blind faculty of the will, is blind itself; and so brings all the inconveniencies that attend a blind follower, under the conduct of a blind guide. South's Sermons

3. An attendant or dependant.

No follower, but a friend. Pope

4. An associate; or companion.

How accompanied, can'st thou tell that?
— With Poins, and other his continual followers Shakesp. Henry IV.

5. One under the command of another.

I hold it no wisdom to leave unto the Irish chiefs too much command over their kindred, but rather withdraw their followers from them as much as may be, and gather them under the command of law. Spenser's State of Ireland.

And forc'd Æneas, when his ships were lost,
To leave his followers on a foreign coast. Dryd. Æn.

6. A scholar; an imitator; a copier.

Be ye followers of me, even as I am of Christ. 1 Corinthians.

The true profession of christianity inviolably engages all its followers to do good to all men. Spratt's Sermons.

Every one's idea of identity will not be the same that Pythagoras and thousands of his followers have. Locke.

The church of Smyrna professed they worthily loved the martyrs, as the disciples and followers of our Lord, and because of their exceeding great affection to their king and their master. Nelson.

The studious head or gen'rous mind,
Follower of God, or friend of human kind,
Poet or patriot, rose but to restore
The faith and moral nature gave before. Pope.

7. One of the same faction or party.

FO'LLY. n. s. [folie, Fr.]

1. Want of understanding; weakness of intellect.

This is folly, childhood's guide,
This is childhood at her side. Hawkesworth.

2. Criminal weakness; depravity of mind.

Think'st thou, that duty should have dread to speak,
When pow'r to flattery bows? To plainness honour
Is bound, when majesty to folly falls. Shakesp.

3. Act of negligence or passion unbecoming gravity or deep wisdom. In this sense it has a plural.

Love is blind, and lovers cannot see
The pretty follies that themselves commit;
For if they could, Cupid himself would blush
To see me thus transformed into a boy. Shakesp.

Thy hum'rous vein, thy pleasing folly,
Lies all neglected, all forgot. Prior.

Leave such to trifle with more grace and ease,
Whom folly pleases, or whose follies please. Pope.

To FOME'NT. v. a. [fomentor, Lat. fomenter, Fr.]

1. To cherish with heat.
   Every kind that lives,
   Fomented by his virtual power, and warm'd. Milt.
2. To bathe with warm lotions.
   He fomented the head with opiates to procure sleep, and a solution of opium in water to foment the forehead. Arbuthnot.
3. To encourage; to support; to cherish.
   They love their givings, and foment their deeds no less than parents do their children. Wotton.
   Blame then thyself, as reason's law requires,
   Since nature gave, and thou foment'st my fires. Dryden.
   They are troubled with those ill humours, which they themselves infused and fomented in them. Locke.

FOMENTA'TION. n. s. [fomentation, Fr. from foment.]

1. A fomentation is partial bathing, called also stuping, which is applying hot flannels to any part, dipped in medicated decoctions, whereby the steams breathe into the parts, and discuss obstructed humours. Quincy.
   Fomentation calleth forth the humour by vapours; but yet, in regard of the way made by the poultis, draweth gently the humours out; for it is a gentle fomentatum, and hath withal a mixture of some stupefactive. Bacon's Natural History.
2. The lotion prepared to foment the parts.
   The medicines were prepared by the physicians, and the lotions or fomentations by the nurses. Arbuthnot.

FOME'NTER. n. s. [from foment.] One that foments; an encourager; a supporter.
   These fatal distempers, as they did much hurt to the body politick at home, being like humours stirred in the natural without evacuation, so did they produce disadvantageous effects abroad; and better had it been, that the raisers and fomenters of them had never sprung up. Howel.

FON. n. s. [Scott. A word now obsolete.] A fool; an idiot.
   Sicker I hold him for a greater fon,
   That love's the thing he cannot purchase. Spenser.

FOND. n. s. [fon, Scott. A word of which I have found no satisfactory etymology. To fonne is in Chaucer to doat, to be foolish.]

1. Foolish; silly; indiscreet; imprudent; injudicious.
   That the Grecians or Gentiles ever did think it a fond or unlikely way to seek men's conversion by sermons, we have not heard. Hooker.
   He was beaten out of all love of learning by a fond school-master. Ascham.
   Tell these sad women,
   'Tis fond to wail inevitable strokes,
   As 'tis to laugh at them. Shakesp. Coriolanus.
   Grant I may never prove so fond
   To trust man on his oath or bond. Shakesp. Timon.
   I am weaker than a woman's tear,
   Tamer than sleep, fonder than ignorance. Shakesp.
   Fond thoughts may fall into some idle brain;
   But one belief of all, is ever wise. Davies.
   Thou see'st
   How subtly to detain thee I devise,
   Inviting thee to hear while I relate;
   Fond! were it not in hope of thy reply. Milton.
   So fond are mortal men,
   Fall'n into wrath divine,
   As their own ruin on themselves t' invite. Milt.
   'Twas not revenge for griev'd Apollo's wrong
   Those ass's ears on Midas' temple hung;
   But fond repentance of his happy wish. Waller.
   But reason with your fond religion fights;
   For many gods are many infinites. Dryden.
   This is fond, because it is the way to cheat thyself. Tillotson.
2. Trifling; valued by folly.
   Not with fond shekles of the tested gold,
   Or stones, whose rate are either rich or poor
   As fancy values them. Shakesp. Meas. for Meas.
3. Foolishly tender; injudiciously indulgent.
   I'm a foolish fond wife. Addison.
   Like Venus I'll shine,
   Be fond and be fine. Addison.
4. Pleased in too great a degree; foolishly delighted: with of.
   Fame is in itself a real good, if we may believe Cicero, who was perhaps too fond of it. Dryden.
   I, fond of my well-chosen seat,
   My pictures, medals, books complete. Prior.
   Some are so fond to know a great deal at once, and love to talk of things with freedom and boldness before they thoroughly understand them. Watts

To FOND. } v. a. [from the noun.] To
To FO'NDLE. } treat with great indulgence; to caress; to cocker.
   Howe'er unjust your jealousy appear,
   It does my pity, not my anger move:
   I'll fond it as the froward child of love. Dryden.
   When midst the fervour of the feast,
   The Tyrian hugs, and fonds thee on her breast,
   And with sweet kisses in her arms constrains,
   Thou may'st infuse the venom in her veins. Dry.
   They are allowed to kiss the child at meeting and parting; but a professor, who always stands by, will not suffer them to use any fondling expressions. Swift.

To FOND. v. n. To be fond of; to be in love with; to doat on.
   How will this fadge? My master loves her dearly;
   And I, poor monster, fond as much on him;
   And she, mistaken, seems to doat on me. Shakesp.

FO NDLER. n. s. [from fond.] One who fondles.

FO'NDLING. n. s. [from fondle.] A person or thing much fondled or caressed; something regarded with great affection.
   Partiality in a parent is commonly unlucky; for fondlings are in danger to be made fools, and the children that are least cockered make the best and wisest men. L'Estrange.
   The bent of our own minds may favour any opinion or action, that may shew it to be a fondling of our own. Locke.
   Any body would have guessed miss to have been bred up under a cruel stepdame, and John to be the fondling of a tender mother. Arbuth. J. Bull.
   Bred a fondling and an heiress,
   Dress'd like any lady may'ress;
   Cocker'd by the servants round,
   Was too good to touch the ground. Swift.

FO'NDLY. adv. [from fond.]

1. Foolishly; weakly; imprudently; injudiciously.
   Most shallowly did you these arms commence,
   Fondly brought here, and foolishly sent hence. Shak.
   Sorrow and grief of heart
   Makes him speak fondly, like a frantick man. Shak.
   Ficinus fondly adviseth, for the prolongation of life, that a vein be opened in the arm of some wholesome young man, and the blood to be sucked. Bacon.
   The military mound
   The British files transcend, in [illegible]
   For their proud foes, that fondly [illegible]av'd their fate. Philips.
   Some valuing those of their own side or mind,
   Still make themselves the measure of mankind:
   Fondly we think we merit honour then,
   When we but praise ourselves in other men Pope.
   Under those sacred leaves, secure
   From common lightning of the skies,
   He fondly thought he might endure
   The flashes of Ardelia's eyes. Swift.
2. With great or extreme tenderness.
   Ev'n before the fatal engine clos'd,
   A wretched sylph too fondly interpos'd:
   Fate urg'd the sheers, and cut the sylph in twain Pope.
   Fondly or severely kind. Savage.

FO'NDNESS. n. s. [from fond.]

1. Foolishness; weakness; want of sense; want of judgment.
   Fondness it were for any, being free,
   To covet fetters, though they golden be. Spenser.
2. Foolish tenderness.
   My heart had still some foolish fondness for thee;
   But hence! 'tis gone: I give it to the winds. Adis.
   Hopeless mother!
   Whose fondness could compare her mortal offspring
   To those which fair Latona bore to Jove. Prior.
3. Tender passion.
   Your jealousy perverts my meaning still;
   My very hate is construed into fondness. A. Philips.
   Corinna, with that youthful air,
   Is thirty, and a bit to spare:
   Her fondness for a certain earl
   Began when I was but a girl. Swift.
4. Unreasonable liking.
   They err that either through indulgence to others, or fondness to any sin in themselves, substitute for repentance any thing that is less than a sincere resolution of new obedience, attended with faithful endeavour, and meet fruits of this change. Hammond.

FONE. n. s. Plural of foe. Obsolete.
   A barbarous troup of clownish fone. Spenser.

FOOD. n. s. [fœban, Sax. veeden, Dut. to feed; feed, Scott]

1. Victuals; provision for the mouth.
   On my knees I beg,
   That you'll vouchsafe me raim[illegible] [illegible]food.
   Much food is in the [illegible]s of the poor. Prov. xiii. 23.
   Under my lowly roof thou hast vouchsaf'd
   To enter, and these earthly fruits to taste;
   Food [illegible]ot of angels, yet accepted so,
   As that more willingly thou could'st not seem
   At heav'n's high feasts t' have fed. Milton.
   They give us food, which may with nectar vie,
   And wax that does the absent sun supply. Waller.
2. Any thing that nourishes.
   Give me some musick: musick, moody food
   Of us that trade in love. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleop.
   O dear son Edgar,
   The food of thy abused father's wrath,
   Might I but live to see thee in my touch,
   I'd say, I had eyes again. Shakesp. King Lear.

FOO'DFUL. adj. [food and full.] Fruitful; full of food; plenteous.
   There Tityus was to see, who took his birth
   From heav'n, his nursing from the foodful earth. Dryden.

If this disguise sit not naturally on so grave a person, yet it may become him better than that fool's coat. Denham.

5. To play the fool. To play pranks like a hired jester; to jest; to make sport.
I returning where I left his armour, found another instead thereof, and armed myself therein to play the fool. Sidney

6. To play the fool. To act like one void of common understanding.
Well, thus we play the fool with the time, and the spirits of the wise sit in the clouds and mock us. Shakesp. Henry IV.
Is it worth the name of freedom to be at liberty to play the fool, and draw shame and misery upon a man's self? Locke.

7. To make a fool of. To disappoint; to defeat.
'Twere as good a deed as to drink when a man's a-hungry, to challenge him to the field, and then to break promise with him, and make a fool of him. Shakesp. Twelfth Night.

To FOOL. v. n. [from the noun.] To trifle; to toy; to play; to idle; to sport.
I, in this kind of merry fooling, am nothing to you; so you may continue and laugh at nothing still. Shakesp. Tempest.
Fool not; for all may have,
If they dare try, a glorious life, a grave. Herbert.
It [illegible] to be court-fools, those that have either wit or honesty, you may fool withal, and spare not. Denham.
It must be an industrious youth that provides against age; and he that fools away [illegible], must either beg or starve in the other. [illegible]
He must be happy that knows the true measures of fooling. L'Estrange.
Is this a time for fooling? Dryden.

To FOOL. v. a.

1. To treat with contempt; to disappoint; to frustrate; to defeat.
And shall it in more shame be further spoken,
That you are fool'd, discarded, and shook off?
Shakesp.
Him over-weaning
To over-reach; but with the serpent meeting,
Fool'd and beguil'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.
If men loved to be deceived and fooled about their spiritual estate, they cannot take a surer course than by taking their neighbour's word for that, which can be known only from their own heart. South.
When I consider life, 'tis all a cheat;
For fool'd with hope, men favour the deceit. Dry.
I'm tir'd with waiting for this chemick gold,
Which fools us young, and beggars us when old. Dryden.
I would advise this blinded set of men not to give credit to those, by whom they have been so often fooled and imposed upon. Addison's Freehold.

2. To infatuate; to make foolish.
If it be you that stir these daughters hearts
Against their father, fool me not so much
To bear it tamely. Shakesp. King Lear.
When I am read, thou feign'st a weak applause,
As if thou wert my friend, but lackest a cause:
This but thy judgment fools; the other way
Would both thy folly and thy spite betray. B. Jon.
It were an handsome plot,
But full of difficulties, and uncertain;
And he's so fool'd with downright honesty,
He'll ne'er believe it. Denham's Sophy.
A long and eternal adieu to all unlawful pleasures: I will no longer be fooled or imposed upon by them. Calamy's Sermons.
A boor of Holland, whose cares of growing still richer and richer, perhaps fool him so far as to make him enjoy less in his riches than others in poverty. Temple.

Reply not to me with a foolborn jest. Shak. H. IV.

FOO'LERY. n. s. [from fool.]

1. Habitual folly.
Foolery, Sir, does walk about the orb like the sun; it shines every where: I would be sorry, Sir, but the fool should be as oft with your master as with my mistress. Shakesp. Twelfth Night.

2. An act of folly; trifling practice.
It is meer foolery to multiply distinct particulars in treating of things, where the difference lies only in words. Watts.

3. Object of folly.
That Pythagoras, Plato, or Orpheus believed in any of these fooleries, it cannot be suspected. Raleigh's History.
We are transported with fooleries, which, if we understood, we should despise. L'Estrange.

FOOL-HA'PPY. adj. [fool and happy.] Lucky without contrivance or judgment.
As when a ship, that flies fair under sail,
An hidden rock escaped unawares,
That lay in wait her wreck for to bewail;
The mariner, yet half amazed, stares
At perils past, and yet in doubt he dares
To joy at his fool-happy oversight. Fairy Queen.

FOOLHA'RDINESS. n. s. [from foolhardy.] Mad rashness; courage without sense.
There is a difference betwixt daring and foolhardiness: Lucan and Statius often ventured them too far, our Virgil never. Dryden.
A false glozing parasite would call his foolhardiness valour, and then he may go on boldly because blindly. South.

FOOLHA'RDISE. n. s. [fool and hardiesse, Fr.] Foolhardiness; adventurousness without judgment. Obsolete.
More huge in strength than wise in works he was,
And reason with foolhardise over-ran;
Stern melancholy did his courage pass,
And was, for terror more, all arm'd in shining brass. Fairy Queen.

FOOLHA'RDY. adj. [fool and hardy.] Daring without judgment; madly adventurous; foolishly bold.
One mother, when her foolhardy child
Did come too near, and with his talons play,
Half dead through fear, her little babe revil'd. Fairy Queen.
Some would be so foolhardy as to presume to be more of the cabinet council of God Almighty than the angels. Howel.
If any yet be so foolhardy,
T' expose themselves to vain jeopardy;
If they come wounded off, and lame,
No honour's got by such a maim. Hudibras.

FOO'LTRAP. n. s. [fool and trap.] A snare to catch fools in: as a flytrap.
Betts at the first, went foolraps, where the wise
Like spiders lay in ambush for the flies. Dryden.

FOO'LISH. adj. [from fool.]

1. Void of understanding; weak of intellect.

See on what foot we stand; a scanty shore,
The sea behind, our enemies before. Dryd. Æn.

In specifying the word Ireland, it would seem to insinuate that we are not upon the same foot with our fellow-subjects in England. Swift's Drapier's Letters.

What colour of excuse can be for the contempt with which we treat this part of our species, the negroes, that we should not put them upon the common foot of humanity, that we should only set an insignificant fine upon the man who murders them? Addison.

10. Scheme; plan; settlement.

There is no wellwisher to his country without a little hope, that in time the kingdom may be on a better foot. Swift.

I ask, whether upon the foot of our constitution, as it stood in the reign of the late King James, a king of England may be deposed? Swift.

11. A state of incipient existence; first motion. Little used but in the following phrase.

If such a tradition were at any time set on foot, it is not easy to imagine how it should at first gain entertainment; but much more difficult how it should come to be universally propagated. Tillotson.

12. It seems to have been once proverbially used for the level, the square, par.

Were it not for this easy borrowing upon interest, men's necessities would draw upon them a most sudden undoing, in that they would be forced to sell their means, be it lands or goods, far under foot. Bacon's Essays.

13. A certain number of syllables constituting a distinct part of a verse.

Feet, in our English versifying, without quantity and joints, be sure signs that the verse is either born deformed, unnatural or lame. Ascham's Schoolm.

Didst thou hear these verses?
—O yes, I heard them all, and more too; for some o' them had in them more feet than the verses would bear. Shakesp.

And Sidney's verse halts ill on Roman feet. Pope.

14. Motion; action.

While other jests are something rank on foot,
Her father hath commanded her to slip
Away with Slender to marry. Shakesp.

In the government of the world the number and variety of the ends on foot, with the secret nature of most things to which they relate, must make a distinct remark of their congruity, in some cases very difficult, and in some unattainable. Grew.

15. Step.

This man's son would, every foot and anon, be taking some of his companions into the orchard. L'Estrange.

16. A measure containing twelve inches; supposed to be the length of a man's foot. When it signifies measure, it has often, but vitiously, foot in the plural.

An orange, lemon, and apple, wrapt in a linen cloth, being buried for a fortnight's space four foot deep within the earth, came forth no ways mouldy or rotten. Bacon.

To* FOOT. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To dance; to tread wantonly; to trip.

Lonely the vale and full of horror stood,
Brown with the shade of a religious wood;
The moon was up, and shot a gleamy light;
He saw a quire of ladies in a round,
That featly footing seem'd to skim the ground. Dryd.

2. To walk; not ride; not fly.

By this the dreadful beast drew nigh to land,
Half flying, and half footing in his haste. F. Queen.

The man set the boy upon the ass, and footed it himself. L'Estrange.

If you are for a merry jaunt, I'll try, for once, who can foot it farthest. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

With them a man sometimes cannot be a penitent unless he also turns vagabond, and foots it to Jerusalem; or wanders over this or that part of the world, to visit the shrine of such or such a pretended saint. South.

To* FOOT. v. a.

1. To spurn; to kick.

You, that did void your rheum upon my beard,
and foot me as you spurn a stranger cur over your threshold. Shakesp.

2. To settle; to begin to fix.

What confed'racy have you with the traitors
Late footed in the kingdom? Shakesp. King Lear.

3. To tread.

Saint Withold footed thrice the wold:
He met the night-mare, and her name told;
Bid her alight, and her troth plight,
And aroynt thee, witch, aroynt thee right. Shak.

There haply by the ruddy damsel seen,
Or shepherd's boy, they featly foot the green. Tick.

4. To hold with the foot. Not in use.

We are the earth, and they,
Like moles within us, heave and cast about;
And till they foot and clutch their prey,
They never cool, much less give out. Herbert.

FOOTBALL. n. s. [foot and ball.]

1. A ball commonly made of a blown bladder, cased with leather, driven by the foot.

Am I so round with you as you with me,
That like a football you do spurn me thus? Shak.

Such a Winter-piece should be beautified with all manner of works and exercises of Winter; as footballs, felling of wood, and sliding upon the ice. Peacham.

As when a sort of lusty shepherds try
Their force at football, care of victory
Makes them salute so rudely, breast to breast,
That their encounter seems too rough for jest. Waller.

One rolls along a football to his foes,
One with a broken truncheon deals his blows. Dryden.

2. The sport or practice of kicking the foot-ball.

He was sensible the common football was a very imperfect imitation of that exercise. Arbuthnot and Pope's Mart. Scribl.

FOOTBOY. n. s. [foot and boy] A low menial; an attendant in livery.

Was it discretion, lords, to let this man,
This honest man, wait like a lowsy footboy
At chamber-door? Shakesp. Hen. VIII.

Though I had nobody to assist but a footboy, yet I made shift to try a pretty number of things. Boyle.

Whenever he imagines advantages will redound to one of his footboys by oppression of me, he never disputes it. Swift.

FOOTHOLD. n. s. [foot and hold.] Space to hold the foot; space on which one may tread surely.

All fell to work at the roots of the tree, and left it so little foothold, that the first blast laid it flat on the ground. L'Estrange.

He's at the top: he has nothing above him to aspire to, nor any foothold left him to come down by. L'Estrange.

FOOTING. n. s. [from foot.]

1. Ground for the foot.

I'll read you matter deep and dangerous;
As full of peril and advent'rous spirit
As to o'erwalk a current, roaring loud,
On the unsteadfast footing of a spear. Shak. Hen. VI.

As Noah's pigeon, which return'd no more,
Did shew she footing found, for all the flood. Dav.

In ascents, every step gained is a footing and help to the next. Holder's Elements of Speech.

2. Support; root.

Set cloven stakes; and wond'rous to behold,
Their sharpen'd ends in earth their footing place,
And the dry poles produce a living race. Dryd. Virg.

3. Basis; foundation.

All those sublime thoughts take their rise and footing here: the mind stirs not one jot beyond those ideas which sense or reflection have offered. Locke.

The reasoning faculties of the soul would not know how to move, for want of a foundation and footing in most men, who cannot trace truth to its fountain and original. Locke.

4. Place; possession.

Whether the unctuous exhalations are
Fir'd by the sun, or seeming so alone;
Or each some more remote and slippery star,
Which loses footing when to mortals shewn. Dryd.

5. Tread; walk.

As he forward moved his footing old,
So backward still was turned his wrinkled face. Spenser.

I would outnight you did no body come:
But hark, I hear the footing of a man. Shakesp.

Break off, break off; I feel the different sound
Of some chaste footing near about this ground.

6. Dance.

Make holyday: your rye-straw hats put on,
And these fresh nymphs encounter every one
In country footing. Shakesp. Tempest.

7. Step; road; track.

He grew strong among the Irish; and in his footing his son continuing, hath increased his said name. Spenser on Ireland.

Like running weeds, that have no certain root;
or like footings up and down, impossible to be traced. Bacon's Hen. VII.

8. Entrance; beginning; establishment.

Ever since our nation had any footing in this land, the state of England did desire to perfect the conquest. Davies.

The defeat of Colonel Bellasis gave them their first footing in Yorkshire. Clarendon.

No useful arts have yet found footing here;
But all untaught and savage does appear. Dryden.

9. State; condition; settlement.

Gaul was on the same footing with Egypt as to taxes Arbuthnot.

FOO'TSTEP. n. s. [foot and step.]

1. Trace; mark; impression left by the foot.

Clear-sighted reason, wisdom's judgment leads,
And sense, her vassal, in her footsteps treads. Denh.

A man shall never want crooked paths to walk in, if he thinks that he is in the right way wherever he has the footsteps of others to follow. Locke.

2. Token; mark; notice given.

Let us turn our thoughts to the frame of our system, if there we may trace any visible footsteps of Divine wisdom and beneficence. Bentley's Serm.

3. Example.

FOO'TSTOOL. n. s. [foot and stool.] Stool on which he that sits places his feet.

Thus have we swept suspicion from our seat,
And made our footstool of security. Shak. Hen. VI.

They whose sacred office 'tis to bring
Kings to obey their God, and men their king,
By these mysterious links to fix and tye
Men to the footstool of the Deity. Denham's Sophy.

Let echoing anthems make his praises known
On earth, his footstool, as in heaven his throne.
Roscommon.

By the phrase of worshiping his footstool, no more is meant than worshiping God at his footstool.
Stilling fleet.

FOP. n. s. [A word probably made by chance, and therefore without etymology.] A simpleton; a coxcomb; a man of small understanding and much ostentation; a pretender; a man fond of show, dress, and flutter; an impertinent.

A whole tribe of fops,
Got 'tween asleep and awake. Shak. King Lear.

When such a positive abandon'd fop,
Among his numerous absurdities,
Stumbles upon some tolerable line,
I fret to see them in such company. Roscommon.

The leopard's beauty, without the fox's wit, is no better than a fop in a gay coat. L'Estrange.

In a dull stream, which moving slow,
You hardly see the current flow;
When a small breeze obstructs the course,
It whirls about for want of force,
And in its narrow circle gathers
Nothing but chaff, and straws, and feathers:
The current of a female mind
Stops thus, and turns with ev'ry wind;
Thus whirling round, together draws
Fools, fops, and rakes, for chaff and straws. Swift.

FO'PDOODLE. n. s. [fop and doodle.] A fool; an insignificant wretch.

Where sturdy butchers broke your noddle,
And handled you like a fopdoodle. Hudibras.

FO'PPERY. n. s. [from fop.]

1. Folly; impertinence.

Let not the sound of shallow foppery enter
My sober house. Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

I was three or four times in the thought they were not fairies; and yet the guiltiness of my mind, the sudden surprise of my powers, drove the grossness of the foppery into a received belief, in despight of the teeth of all rhyme and reason, that they were fairies.
Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

This is the excellent foppery of the world, that when we are sick in fortune, often the surfeits of our own behaviour, we make guilty of our disasters, the sun, the moon, and stars, as if we were villains on necessity. Shakesp King Lear.

2. Affectation of show or importance; showy folly.

3. Foolery; vain or idle practice; idle affectation.

They thought the people were better let alone in their fopperies, than to be suffered to break loose from that subjection which your superstition kept them in. Stilling fleet.

But though we fetch from Italy and France
Our fopperies of tune and modes of dance,
Our sturdy Britons scorn to borrow sense. Granv.

I wish I could say quaint fopperies were wholly absent from graver subjects. Swift.

FO'PPISH. adj. [from fop.]

1. Foolish; idle; vain.

Fools ne'er had less grace in a year;
For wise men are grown foppish,
And know not how their wits to wear,
Their manners are so apish. Shakesp. King Lear.

2. Vain in show; foolishly ostentatious; vain of dress.

With him the present still some virtues have;
The vain are sprightly, and the stupid grave;
The slothful negligent, the foppish neat;
The lewd are airy, and the sly discreet. Garth.

The Romans grew extremely expensive and foppish; insomuch that the emperor Aurelian forbid men that variety of colours on their shoes, allowing it still to women. Arbuthnot.

You would know who is rude and ill-natured, who is vain and foppish, who lives too high, and who is in debt. Law.

FO'PPISHLY. adv. [from foppish.] Vainly; ostentatiously.

FO'PPISHNESS. n. s. [from foppish.] Vanity; showy or ostentatious vanity.

Tickell.

FOR. prep. [for, Sax. voor, Dut.]

1. Because of.

That which we for our unworthiness are afraid to crave, our prayer is, that God for the worthiness of his Son would notwithstanding vouchsafe to grant. Hooker.

Edward and Richard,
With fiery eyes, sparkling for very wrath,
Are at our backs. Shakesp. Hen. VI.

Speak, good Cominius;
Leave nothing out for length. Shakesp.

For as much as the question cannot be scanned, unless the time of Abraham's journey be considered of, I will search into a tradition concerning his travels. Raleigh's History.

An astrologer saith, if it were not for two things that are constant, no individual would last one moment. Bacon.

For as much as it is a fundamental law in the Turkish empire, that they may, without any other provocation, make war upon Christendom for the propagation of their laws; so the Christians may at all times, as they think good, be upon the prevention. Bacon's War with Spain.

The governour sallying out, took great store of victual and warlike provision, which the Turks had for haste left behind them. Knolles's Hist.

Their offer he willingly accepted, knowing that he was not able to keep that place three days, for lack of victuals. Knolles.

Quit, quit, for shame; this will not move,
This cannot take her:
If of herself she will not love,
Nothing can make her. Suckling.

Care not for frowns or smiles. Denham's Sophy.

The hypocrite or carnal man hopes, and is the wickeder for hoping. Hammond's Pract. Catech.

Let no man, for his own poverty, become more oppressing in his bargains; but quietly recommend his estate to God, and leave the success to him. Taylor.

Persons who have lost most of their grinders, having been compelled to use three or four only in chewing, wore them so low, that the inward nerve lay bare, and they would no longer for pain make use of them. Ray on the Creation.

I but revenge my fate; disdain'd, betray'd,
And suff'ring death for this ungrateful maid. Dry.

Sole on the barren sands, the suff'ring chief
Roar'd out for anguish, and indulg'd his grief. Dr.

For his long absence church and state did groan,
Madness the pulpit, faction seiz'd the throne. Dry.

Nor with a superstitious fear is aw'd
For what befalls at home, or what abroad. Dryden.

I, my own judge, condemn'd myself before;
For pity, aggravate my crime no more. Dryden.

Matrons of renown,
When tyrant Nero burnt th' imperial town,
Shriek'd for the downfall in a doleful cry,
For which their guiltless lords were doom'd to die.
Dryden.

Children, discountenanced by their parents for any fault, find a refuge in the caresses of foolish flatterers. Locke.

A sound mind in a sound body is a short but full description of a happy state in this world: he that has these two has little more to wish for, and he that wants either of them will be but little better for any thing else. Locke.

The middle of the gulph is remarkable for tempests. Addison.

My open'd thought to joyous prospect raise,
And for thy merey let me sing thy praise. Prior.

But could not get him for my heart. Shakesp.

I cannot for my heart leave a room, before I have thoroughly examined the papers pasted upon the walls. Addison's Spectator.

40. For all. Notwithstanding.

Neither doubt you, because I wear a woman's apparel, I will be the more womanish; since I assure you, for all my apparel, there is nothing I desire more than fully to prove myself a man in this enterprize. Sidney.

For all the carefulness of the Christians the English bulwark was undermined by the enemy, and upon the fourth of September part thereof was blown up. Knolles's History.

But as Noah's pigeon, which return'd no more, Did shew she footing found for all the flood. Dav.

They resolute, for all this, do proceed
Unto that judgment. Daniel.

If we apprehend the greatest things in the world of the emperor of China or Japan, we are well enough contented, for all that, to let them govern at home. Stillingfleet.

Though that very ingenious person has anticipated part of what I should say, yet you will, for all that, expect that I should give you a fuller account. Boyle.

She might have passed over my businesses; but my rabble is not to be mumbled up in silence, for all her pertness. Dryden.

For all his exact plot, down was he cast from all his greatness, and forced to end his days in a mean condition. South.

41. For to. In the language used two centuries ago, for was commonly used before to, the sign of the infinitive mood, to note the final cause. As, I come for to see you, for I love to see you: in the same sense with the French pour. Thus it is used in the translation of the Bible. But this distinction was by the best writers sometimes forgotten; and for, by wrong use, appearing superfluous, is now always omitted.

Who shall let me now
On this vile body for to wreak my wrong? Fairy Q.

A large posterity
Up to your happy palaces may mount,
Of blessed [illegible] for to increase the count. Spenser.

FOR. conj.

1. The word by which the reason is introduced of something advanced before.

Heav'n doth with us as we with torches deal,
Not light them for themselves; for if our virtues
Did not go forth of us, 'twere all alike
As if we had them not. Shakesp. Meas. for Meas.

Old husbandmen I at Sabinum know,
Who for another year dig, plough, and sow;
For never any man was yet so old,
But hop'd his life one Winter more would hold. Denham.

Tell me what kind of thing is wit:
For the first matter loves variety less. Cowley.

Thus does he foolishly who, for fear of any thing in this world, ventures to displease God; for in so doing he runs away from men, and falls into the hands of the living God. Tillotson.

2. Because; on this account that. It is in this sense properly followed by that, and without it is elliptical. This sense is almost obsolete.

I doubt not but great troops would be ready to run; yet for that the worst men are most ready to remove, I would wish them chosen by discretion of wise men. Spenser on Ireland.

Jealous souls will not be answer'd so:
They are not ever jealous for a cause,
But jealous for they're jealous. Shakesp. Othello.

Heaven defend your good souls, that you think I will your serious and great business scant;
For she is with me. Shakesp. Othello.

Nor swell'd his breast with uncouth pride,
That heav'n on him above his charge had laid;
But, for his great Creator would the same,
His will increas'd; so fire augmenteth flame. Fairf.

Many excrescences of trees grow chiefly where the tree is dead or faded; for that the natural sap of the tree corrupteth into some preternatural substance. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

3. For as much. In regard to that; in consideration of.

For as much as in publick prayer we are not only to consider what is needful, in respect of God; but there is also in men that which we must regard: we somewhat incline to length, lest overquick dispatch should give occasion to deem, that the thing itself is but little accounted of. Hooker.

For as much as the thirst is intolerable, the patient may be indulged the free use of spaw water. Arbuthnot.

4. For why. Because; for this reason that.

Solyman had three hundred fieldpieces; for why, Solyman purposing to draw the emperor into battle, had brought no pieces of battery with him. Knolles.

To FO'RAGE. v. n. [from foris abroad, Lat.]

Forage, and run
To meet displeasure farther from the doors,
And grapple with him, ere he come so nigh. Shak.

2. To wander in search of spoil, generally of provisions.

As in a stormy night,
Wolves, urged by their raging appetite,
Forage for prey. Denham.

There was a brood of young larks in the corn, and the dam went abroad to forage for them. L'Estrange.

Nor dare they stray
When rain is promis'd or a stormy day;
But near the city walls their wat'ring take,
Nor forage far, but short excursions make. Dryd.

3. To ravage; to feed on spoil.

His most mighty father on a hill
Stood smiling, to behold his lion's whelp
Forage in blood of French nobility. Shakesp.

To FO'RAGE. v. a. To plunder; to strip; to spoil.

They will both strengthen all the country round, and also be as continual holds for her majesty, if the people should revolt; for without such it is easy to forage and over-run the whole land. Spenser.

The victorious Philistines were worsted by the captivated ark, which forayed their country more than a conquering army. South.

FO'RAGE. n. s. [fourage, Germ. and Fr. from foris, Lat.]

1. Search of provisions; the act of feeding abroad.
   One way a band select from forage drives
   A herd of beeves, fair oxen, and fair kine,
   From a fat meadow ground; or fleecy flock,
   Ewes and their bleating lambs, over the plains
   Their booty. Milton's Par. Lost.
2. Provisions sought abroad.
   Some o'er the publick magazines preside,
   And some are sent new forage to provide. Dryd.
3. Provisions in general.
   Provided forage, our spent arms renew'd. Dryd.

FORA'MINOUS. adj. [from foramen, Lat.] Full of holes; perforated in many places; porous.
Soft and foraminous bodies, in the first creation of the sound, will deaden it; but in the passage of the sound they will admit it better than harder bodies. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

To* FORBE'AR. v. n. pret. I forbore, anciently forbare; part. forborn, [ꝑonbæꝛan, Sax. For has in composition the power of privation; as, forbear: or depravation; as, forswear, and other powers not easily explained.]

1. To cease from any thing; to intermit.
   Who can forbear to admire and adore him who weighed the mountains in scales, and the hills in a balance. Cheyne.
2. To pause; to delay.
   I pray you, tarry, pause a day or two,
   Before you hazard; for in chusing wrong,
   I lose your company; therefore forbear a while. Shakesp.
3. To omit voluntarily; not to do; to abstain.
   He forbare to go forth. 1 Sa. xxiii. 13.
   At this he started, and forbore to swear;
   Not out of conscience of the sin, but fear. Dryden.
   The wolf, the lion, and the bear,
   When they their prey in pieces tear,
   To quarrel with themselves forbear. Denham.
4. To restrain any violence of temper; to be patient.

   When from the wood a lion does appear. Waller.
2. To abstain from; to shun to do; to omit.
   If it passed only by the house of peers, it should be looked upon as invalid and void, and execution should be thereupon forborn or suspended. Clarendon.
   There is not any one action whatsoever which a man ought to do, or to forbear, but the Scripture will give him a clear precept or prohibition for it. South.
3. To spare; to treat with clemency.
   With all lowliness and meekness, with long suffering, forbearing one another in love. Eph. iv. 2.
4. To withhold.
   Forbear thee from meddling with God, who is with me, that he destroy thee not.
   2 Chron. xxxv. 21.

FORBE'ARANCE. n. s. [from forbear.]

1. The care of avoiding or shunning any thing; negation of practice.
   True nobleness would
   Learn him forbearance from so foul a wrong. Shak.
   This may convince us how vastly greater a pleasure is consequent upon the forbearance of sin, than can possibly accompany the commission of it. South.
   Liberty is the power a man has to do, or forbear doing, any particular action, according as its doing or forbearance has the actual preference in the mind. Locke.
2. Intermission of something.
3. Command of temper.
   Have a continent forbearance, 'till the speed of his rage goes slower. Shakesp. King Lear.
4. Lenity; delay of punishment; mildness.
   Nor do I take notice of this instance of severity in our own country to justify such a proceeding, but only to display the mildness and forbearance made use of under the reign of his present majesty. Addison's Freeholder
   He applies to our gratitude by obligations of kindness and beneficence, of long suffering and forbearance. Rogers.

FORBE'ARER. n. s. [from forbear.] An intermitter; interceptor of any thing.
The West as a father all goodness doth bring,
The East a forbearer, no manner of thing. Tusser.

To* FORBI'D. v. a. pret. I forbade; part. forbidden or forbid. [ꝑonbeoban, Sax. verbieden, Dut.]

1. To prohibit; to interdict any thing.
   A witch, a quean, an old cozening quean; have I not forbid her my house? Shakesp.
   It is
   The practice and the purpose of the king,
   From whose obedience I forbid my soul. Shakesp.
   By tasting of that fruit forbid,
   Where they sought knowledge, they did error find. Davies.
   The voice of reason, in all the dictates of natural morality, ought carefully to be attended to, by a strict observance of what it commands, but especially of what it forbids. South.
   All hatred of persons, by very many Christian principles, we are most solemnly and indispensably forbid. Sprat.
   The chaste and holy race
   Are all forbidden this polluted place. Dryd. Æn.
2. To command to forbear any thing.

3. To oppose; to hinder.
   The moisture being forbidden to come up in the plant, stayeth longer in the root, and so dilateth it. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
   The plaster alone would pen the humour, and so exasperate it as well as forbid new humour. Bac.
   Thy throne is darkness in th' abyss of light,
   A blaze of glory that forbids the sight!
   O teach me to believe thee thus conceal'd,
   And search no farther than thyself reveal'd. Dryd.
4. To accurse; to blast. Now obsolete. To bid is in old language to pray; to forbid therefore is to curse.
   Sleep shall neither night nor day
   Hang upon his penthouse lid;
   He shall live a man forbid. Shakesp. Macbeth.

To* FORBI'D. v. n. To utter a prohibition.
Now the good gods forbid,
That our renowned Rome
Should now eat up her own! Shakesp. Coriolanus.

FORBI'DDANCE. n. s. [from forbid.] Prohibition; edict against any thing.
How hast thou yielded to transgress
The strict forbiddance! how to violate
The sacred fruit forbidden? Milton's Par. Lost.

FORBI'DDENLY. adv. [from forbid.] In an unlawful manner.
With all confidence he swears, as he had seen't,
That you have touch'd his queen forbiddenly. Shak.

FORBI'DDER. n. s. [from forbid.] One that prohibits; one that enacts a prohibition.
This was a bold accusation of God, making the fountain of good the contriver of evil, and the forbidder of the crime an abettor of the fact prohibited. Brown.
Other care, perhaps,
May have diverted from continual watch
Our great forbidder! Milton's Par. Lost.

FORBI'DDING. participial adj. [from forbid.] Raising abhorrence; repelling approach; causing aversion.
Tragedy was made forbidding and horrible. A. Hill.

FORCE. n. s. [force; Fr. fortis, Lat.]

1. Strength; vigour; might; active power.
   He never could maintain his part but in the force of his will. Shakesp. Much ado about Nothing.
   A ship, which hath struck sail, doth run
   By force of that force which before it won. Donne
2. Violence.
   Thus got the house of Lancaster the crown,
   Which now they hold by force, and not by right. Shakesp.
   The shepherd Paris bore the Spartan bride
   By force away, and then by force enjoy'd;
   But I by free consent. Dryden
3. Virtue; efficacy.
   Manifest it is, that the very majesty and holiness of the place where God is worshipped, hath, in regard of us, great virtue, force and efficacy; for that it serveth as a sensible help to stir up devotion. Hooker.
   No definitions, no suppositions of any sect, are of force enough to destroy constant experience. Locke.
4. Validness; power of law.
   A testament is of force after men are dead. Heb. ix.
   Not long in force this charter stood;
   Wanting that seal, it must be seal'd in blood. Denh.
5. Armament; warlike preparation. Often forces in the plural.
   O Thou! whose captain I account myself,
   Look on my forces with a gracious eye. Shak. R. III.
   The secret of the power of Spain consisteth in a veteran army, compounded of miscellany forces of all nations. Bacon.
   A greater force than that which here we find,
   Ne'er press'd the ocean, nor employ'd the wind. Waller.
   Those victorious forces of the rebels were not able to sustain your arms. Dryden.
6. Destiny; necessity; fatal compulsion.

To* FORCE. v. a. [from the noun]

1. To compel; to constrain.
   Dangers are light, if they once seem light; and more dangers have deceived men than forced them. Bacon.
   I have been forced to use the cant words of Whig and Tory. Swift's Examiner.
   The actions and operations did force them upon dividing the single idea. Broome's View of Epic Poem.
2. To overpower by strength.
   O that fortune
   Had brought me to the field where thou art fam'd
   To have wrought such wonders with an ass's jaw,
   I should have forc'd thee soon with other arms. Milton.
   With fates averse, the rout in arms resort,
   To force their monarch, and insult the court. Dryden.
3. To impel; to press; to draw or push by main strength.
   Thou shalt not destroy the trees by forcing an ax against them. Deut. xx. 19.

Stooping, the spear descended on his chine,
Just where the bone distinguish'd either loin:
It stuck so fast, so deeply bury'd lay,
That scarce the victor forc'd the steel away. Dryd.

4. To enforce; to urge.

Three blust'ring nights, born by the southern blast,
I floated, and discover'd land at last:
High on a mounting wave my head I bore,
Forcing my strength, and gath'ring to the shore.
Dryden's Æn.

Ye myrtles brown, with ivy never sere,
I come to pluck your berries harsh and crude,
And with forc'd fingers rude
Shatter our leaves before the mellowing year.
Milton.

5. To drive by violence or power.

This way of flattering their willing benefactors out of part, contrived another of forcing their unwilling neighbours out of all their possessions.
Decay of Piety.

To free the ports, and ope the Punique land
To Trojan guests, lest, ignorant of fate,
The queen might force them from her town and state. Dryd.

6. To gain by violence or power.

My heart is yours; but, oh! you left it here
Abandon'd to those tyrants hope and fear:
If they forc'd from me one kind look or word,
Could you not that, nor that small part afford?
Dryden.

7. To storm; to take or enter by violence.

Troy wall'd so high,
Atrides might as well have forc'd the sky. Waller.

Heav'n from all ages wisely did provide
This wealth, and for the bravest nation hide;
Who with four hundred foot, and forty horse,
Dare boldly go a new found world to force. Dryd.

8. To ravish; to violate by force.

Force her.—I like it not. Dryden.

9. To constrain; to distort; not to obtain naturally or with ease.

Our general taste in England is for epigram, turns of wit, and forc'd conceits. Addison's Spec.

10. To man; to strengthen by soldiers; to garrison.

Here let them lye,
Till famine and the ague eat them up: [our's,
Were they not forced with those that should be
We might have met them dareful, beard to beard.
Shakesp.

If you find that any great number of soldiers be newly sent into Orconoque, and that the passages be already forced, then be well advised how you land. Raleigh's Apology.

11. To force out. To extort.

The heat of the dispute had forced out from Luther expressions that seemed to make his doctrine run higher than really it did. Atterbury.

To* FORCE. v. a. To lay stress upon. This word I have only found in the following passage.

[illegible] that he was to join battle with Harold, his armour put on his backpiece before, and his breastplate behind; the which being espied by some that stood by, was taken among them for an ill token, and therefore advised him not to fight that day; to whom the duke answered, I force not of such fooleries; but if I have any skill in soothsaying, as in sooth I have none, it doth prognosticate that I shall change copy from a duke to a king. Camden's Remains.

FO'RCEDLY. adv. [from force.] Violently; constrainedly; unnaturally.

This foundation of the earth upon the waters doth most aptly agree to that structure of the abyss and antediluvian earth; but very improperly and forcedly to the present form of the earth and the waters. Burnet's Theory.

FO'RCEFUL. adj. [force and full.] Violent; strong; driven with great might; impetuous.

Why, what need we
Commune with you of this, but rather follow
Our forceful instigation? Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

Against the steed he threw
His forceful spear, which, hissing as it flew,
Pierc'd through the yielding planks. Dryd. Æn.

Were it by chance, or forceful destiny,
Which forms in causes first whate'er shall be,
Assisted by a friend, one moonless night,
This Palemon from prison took his flight. Dryd.

He pois'd in air, the jav'lin sent,
Through Paris' shield the forceful weapon went.
Pope.

FO'RCEFULLY. adv. [from forceful.] Violently; impetuously.

FO'RCELESS. adj. [from force.] Having little force; weak; feeble; impotent.

FORCEPS. n. s. [Lat.]

Forceps properly signifies a pair of tongs; but is used for an instrument in chirurgery, to extract any thing out of wounds, and the like occasions. Quincy.

FO'RCER. n. s. [from force.]

1. That which forces, drives, or constrains.

2. The embolus of a pump working by pulsion, in contradistinction to a sucker, which acts by attraction.

The usual means for the ascent of water is either by suckers or forcers. Wilkins's Dædalus.

FO'RCIBLE. adj. [from force.]

1. Strong; mighty: opposed to weak.

That punishment, which hath been sometimes forcible to bridle sin, may grow afterwards too weak and feeble. Hooker.

Who therefore can invent
With what more forcible we may offend
Our yet unwounded enemies? Milton.

2. Violent; impetuous.

Jersey, belov'd by all; for all must feel
The influence of a form and mind,
Where comely grace and constant virtue dwell,
Like mingl'd streams, more forcible when join'd:
Jersey shall at thy altars stand,
Shall there receive the azure band. Prior.

3. Efficacious; active; powerful.

Sweet smells are most forcible in dry substances, when broken: and so likewise in oranges, the ripping of their rind giveth out their smell more.
Bacon's Natural History.

4. Prevalent; of great influence.

How forcible are right words? Job.

God hath assured us, that there is no inclination or temptation so forcible which our humble prayers and desires may not frustrate and break asunder. Raleigh's History.

5. Done by force; suffered by force.

He swifter far,
Me overtook, his mother all dismay'd,
And in embraces forcible and foul
Ingend'ring with me. Milton.

The abdication of king James, the advocates on that side look upon to have been forcible and unjust, and consequently void. Swift.

6. Valid; binding; obligatory.

FO'RCIBLENESS. n. s. [from forcible.] Force; violence.

FO'RCIBLY. adv. [from forcible.]

1. Strongly; powerfully.

The Gospel offers such considerations as are fit to work very forcibly upon two of the most swaying and governing passions in the mind, our hopes and our fears. Tillotson.

2. Impetuously; with great strength.

3. By violence; by force.

He himself with greedy great desire
Into the castle enter'd forcibly. Fairy Queen.

The taking and carrying away of women forcibly, and against their will, except female wards and bondwomen, was made capital.
Bac. Hen. VII.

This doctrine brings us down to the level of horse and mule, whose mouths are forcibly holden with bit and bridle. Hammond.

FO'RCIPATED. adj. [from forceps.] Formed like a pair of pincers to open and inclose.

The locusts have antennæ, or long horns before, with a long falcation or forcipated tail behind.
Brown.

When they have seized their prey, they will so tenaciously hold it with their forcipated mouth, that they will not part therewith, even when taken out of the waters. Derham.

FORD. n. s. [ꝼopb, Sax. from ꝼapan to pass.]

1. A shallow part of a river where it may be passed without swimming.

Her men the paths rode through made by her sword;
They pass the stream, when she had found the ford.
Fairfax.

2. It sometimes signifies the stream, the current, without any consideration of passage or shallowness.

Medusa with Gorgonian terror guards
The ford, and of itself the water flies
All taste of living wight. Milton's Par. Lost

Rise, wretched widow! rise; nor undeplor'd
Permit my ghost to pass the Stygian ford:
But rise, prepar'd in black to mourn thy perish'd lord. Dryden.

To* FORD. v. a. [from the noun.] To pass without swimming.

Adam's shin-bones must have contained a thousand fathom, and much more, if he had forded the ocean. Raleigh's History.

Fording his current where thou find'st it low.
Denham.

FO'RDABLE. adj. [from ford.] Passable without swimming.

Pliny placeth the Schenitæ upon the Euphrates, where the same beginneth to be fordable.
Raleigh.

A countryman sounded a river up and down, to try where it was most fordable; and where the water ran too smooth, he found it deepest; and, on the contrary, shallowest where it made most noise. L'Estrange.

FORE. adj. [ꝼopa, Sax.]

1. Anterior; that which is before; not behind.

Though there is an orb or spherical area of the sound, yet they move strongest and go farthest in the fore lines from the first local impression.
Bacon.

2. That which comes first in a progressive motion.

Resistance in fluids arises from their greater pressing on the fore than hind part of the bodies moving in them. Cheyne.

FORE. adv.

1. Anteriorly; in the part which appears first to those that meet it.

Each of them will bear six demiculverins and four sakers, needing no other addition than a slight spar deck fore and aft, which is a slight deck throughout. Raleigh's Essays.

2. Fore is a word much used in composition to mark priority of time, of which some examples shall be given. A vitious orthography has confounded for and fore in composition.

To* FOREADVI'SE. v. n. [fore and advice.] To counsel early; to counsel before the time of action, or the event.

Thus to have said,
As you were foreadvis'd, had touch'd his spirit,
And tried his inclination. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

To* FOREAPPO'INT. v. n. [fore and appoint.] To order beforehand.

To* FOREA'RM. v. a. [fore and arm.] To provide for attack or resistance before the time of need.

A man should fix and forearm his mind with this persuasion, that, during his passion, whatsoever is offered to his imagination tends only to deceive. South.

He forearms his care
With rules to push his fortune, or to bear. Dryd.

To FOREBO'DE. v. n. [fore and bode.]

1. To prognosticate; to foretell.

An ancient augur, skill'd in future fate,
With these foreboding words restrains their hate. Dryden.

2. To foreknow; to be prescient of; to feel a secret sense of something future.

Fate makes you deaf, while I in vain implore:
My heart forebodes I ne'er shall see you more. Dryd.
My soul foreboded I should find the bow'r
Of some fell monster, fierce with barb'rous pow'r. Pope.

FOREBO'DER. n. s. [from forebode.]

1. A prognosticator; a soothsayer.

Your raven has a reputation in the world for a bird of omen, and a kind of small prophet: a crow that had observed the raven's manner and way of delivering his predictions, sets up for a foreboder. L'Estrange.

2. A foreknower.

FOREBY'. prep. [fore and by.] Near; hard by; fast by.

Not far away he hence doth won

1. To scheme; to plan before execution.

He shall forecast his devices against the strong holds. Dan. xi.

2. To adjust; to contrive antecedently.

The feast was serv'd; the time so well forecast,
That just when the dessert and fruits were plac'd,
The fiend's alarm began. Dryd. Theod. and Honoria.

3. To foresee; to provide against.

It is wisdom to consider the end of things before we embark, and to forecast consequences. L'Estrange

To FORECA'ST. v. n. To form schemes; to contrive beforehand.

And whatso heavens in their secret doom
Ordained have, how can frail fleshy wight
Forecast, but it must needs to issue come? Spenser.
When broad awake, she finds in troublous flit,
Forecasting how his foe he might annoy. Fairy Q.

FO'RECAST. n. s. [from the verb.] Contrivance beforehand; scheme; plan; antecedent policy.

Alas! that Warwick had no more forecast,
But while he thought to steal the single ten,
The king was slily finger'd from the deck! Shak.
He makes this difference to arise from the forecast and predetermination of the gods. Addison.
The last, scarce ripen'd into perfect man,
Saw helpless him from whom their life began:
Mem'ry and forecast just returns engage;
That pointed back to youth, this on to age. Pope.

FORECA'STER. n. s. [from forecast.] One who contrives beforehand.

FO'RECASTLE. n. s. [fore and castle.] In a ship, is that part where the foremast stands, and is divided from the rest of the floor by a bulk-head: that part of the forecastle which is aloft, and not in the hold, is called the prow. Harris.

The commodity of the new cook-room the merchants have found to be so great, as that, in all their ships, the cook-rooms are built in their forecastles, contrary to that which had been anciently used. Raleigh's Essays.

FORECHO'SEN. part. [fore and chosen.] Pre-elected.

FORECI'TED. part. [fore and cite.] Quoted before, or above.

I to the foredeck went, and thence did look
For rocky Scylla. Chapman's Odyssey.

To FOREDESI'GN. v. a. [fore and design.] To plan beforehand.

All the steps of the growth and vegetation both of animals and plants, have been foreseen and foredesigned by the wise Author of nature. Cheyne.

To FOREDO'. v. a. [from for and do, not fore.]

1. To ruin; to destroy. A word obsolete. Opposed to making happy.

Beseeching him, if either salves or oils,
A foredone wight from door of death might raise,
He would at her request prolong her nephew's days. Fairy Queen.
That drew on men God's hatred and his wrath,
And many souls in dolours had foredone. Fairy Q.
This doth betoken,
The corse they follow did with desperate hand
Foredo its own life. Shakesp. Hamlet.
This is the night
That either makes me, or foredoes me quite. Shak.

2. To overdo; to weary; to harass.

Whilst the heavy plowman snoars,
All with weary task foredone. Shakesp.

To FOREDO'OM. v. a. [fore and doom.] To predestinate; to determine beforehand.

Through various hazards and events we move
To Latium, and the realms foredoom'd by Jove.
Dryden's Æn.
The willing metal will obey thy hand,
Following with ease: if favour'd by thy fate,
Thou art foredoom'd to view the Stygian state.
Dryden.
Fate foredoom'd, and all things tend
By course of time to their appointed end. Dryd.
Here Britain's statesmen oft the fall foredoom
Of foreign tyrants, and of nymphs at home. Pope.

FORE-E'ND. n. s. [fore and end.] The anteriour part.

I have liv'd at honest freedom; paid
More pious debts to heaven than in all
The fore-end of my time. Shakesp. Cymbeline.
In the fore-end of it, which was towards him, grew a small green branch of palm. Bacon.

FOREFA'THER. n. s. [fore and father.] Ancestor; one who in any degree of ascending genealogy precedes another.

The custom of the people of God, and the decrees of our forefathers, are to be kept, touching those things whereof the Scripture hath neither one way or other given us charge. Hooker
If it be a generous desire in men to know from whence their own forefathers have come, it cannot be displeasing to understand the place of our first ancestor. Raleigh's History
Conceit is still deriv'd
From some forefather grief; mine is not so. Shak.
Shall I not be distraught,
And madly play with my forefathers joints? Shak.
Our great forefathers
Had left him naught to conquer but their country.
Addison.
When a man sees the prodigious pains our forefathers have been at in these barbarous buildings, one cannot but fancy what miracles of architecture they would have left us, had they been instructed in the right way. Addison on Italy.
Blest Peer! his great forefathers ev'ry grace
Reflecting, and reflected in his race. Pope.

To FOREFE'ND. v. a. [It is doubtful whether from fore or for and defend. If from fore, it implies antecedent provision; as forearm: if from for prohibitory security; as forbid. Of the two following examples one favours for, and the other fore.]

1. To prohibit; to avert.

I would not kill thy unprepared spirit;
No, heav'ns forefend! I would not kill thy soul.
Shakesp.
Perhaps a fever, which the gods forefend,
May bring your youth to some untimely end.
Dryd.

2. To provide for; to secure.

Down with the nose,
Down with it flat: take the bridge quite away
Of him, that, his particular to forefend,
Smells from the gen'ral weal. Shakesp.

FOREFI'NGER. n. s. [fore and finger.] The finger next to the thumb; the index.

An agate stone
On the forefinger of an alderman. Shakesp.
Polymnia shall be drawn, as it were, acting her speech with her forefinger. Peacham on Drawing.
Some wear this on the middle-finger, as the ancient Gauls and Britons; and some upon the forefinger. Brown.

FO'REFOOT. n. s. plur. forefeet. [fore and foot.] The anteriour foot of a quadruped: in contempt, a hand.

Give me thy fist, thy forefoot to me give. Shak.
He ran fiercely, and smote at Heliodorus with his forefeet. 2 Mac. iii. 25.
I continue my line from thence to the heel; then making the breast with the eminency thereof, bring out his near forefoot, which I finish.
Peacham on Drawing.

To FOREGO'. v. a. [fore and go.]

1. To quit; to give up; to resign.

Is it her nature, or is it her will,
To be so cruel to an humble foe?
If nature, then she may it mend with skill;
If will, then she at will may will forego. Spenser.
Having all before absolutely in his power, it remaineth so still, he having already neither foregiven nor foregone any thing thereby unto them, but having received something from them. Spenser
He is a great adventurer, said he,
That hath his sword through hard essay foregone,
And now hath vowed 'till he avenged be
Of that despite, never to wearen none. Fairy Q.
Special reason oftentimes causeth the will to prefer one good thing before another; to leave one for another's sake, to forego meaner for the attainment of higher degrees. Hooker
Must I then leave you? Must I needs forego
So good, so noble, and so true a master? Shakesp.
Let us not forego
That for a trifle which was bought with blood.
Shakesp.
How can I live without thee! how forego
Thy sweet converse, and love so dearly joined,
To live again in these wild woods forlorn?
This argument might prevail with you to forego a little of your repose for the publick benefit. Dryd.
What they have enjoyed with great pleasure at one time, has proved insipid or nauseous at another; and therefore they see nothing in it, for which they should forego a present enjoyment. Locke.

2. To go before; to be past. [from fore and go.]

By our remembrances of days foregone,
Such were our faults: O! then we thought them not. Shakesp.
It is to be understood of Cain, that many years foregone, and when his people were increased, he built the city of Enoch. Raleigh.
Reflect upon the two foregoing objections. Boyle.
This foregoing remark gives the reason why imitation pleases. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
I was seated in my elbow-chair, where I had indulged the foregoing speculations. Addison.
In the foregoing part of this work I promised proofs. Woodward.

3. To lose.

This is the very ecstasy of love,
Whose violent property foregoes itself,
And leads the will to desperate undertakings. Shak.

FOREGO'ER. n. s. [from forego.] Ancestor; progenitor.

Honours best thrive,
When rather from our acts we them derive
Than our foregoers. Shakesp.

FOR'EGROUND. n. s. [fore and ground.] The part of the field or expanse of a picture which seems to lie before the figures.

All agree that white can subsist on the foreground of the picture: the question therefore is to know, if it can equally be placed upon that which is backward, the light being universal, and the figures supposed to be in an open field. Dryden

FO'REHAND. n. s. [fore and hand.]

1. The part of a horse which is before the rider.
2. The chief part. Not in use.

The great Achilles whom opinion crowns
The sinew and the forehand of our host. Shakesp.

FO'REHAND. adj. Done sooner than is regular.

You'll say she did embrace me as a husband,
And so extenuate the forehand sin. Shakesp.

FOREHA'NDED. n. s. [from fore and hand.]

1. Early; timely.

If by thus doing you have not secured your time by an early and forehanded care, yet be sure, by a timely diligence, to redeem the time. Taylor.

2. Formed in the foreparts.

He's a substantial true-bred beast, bravely forehanded: mark but the cleanness of his shapes too. Dryden.

FO'REHEAD. n. s. [fore and head]

1. That part of the face which reaches from the eyes upward to the hair.

The breast of Hecuba,
When she did suckle Hector, look'd not lovelier
Than Hector's forehead when it spit forth blood
At Grecian swords contending. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

Some angel copy'd, while I slept, each grace,
And moulded ev'ry feature from my face:
Such majesty does from her forehead rise,
Her cheeks such blushes cast, such rays her eyes. Dryden.

2. Impudence; confidence; assurance; audaciousness; audacity. The forehead is the part on which shame visibly operates.

A man of confidence presseth forward upon every appearance of advantage; where his force is too feeble, he prevails by dint of impudence: these men of forehead are magnificent in promises, and infallible in their prescriptions. Collier.

I would fain know to what branch of the legislature they can have the forehead to apply. Swift.

FOREHO'LDING. n. s. [fore and hold.] Predictions; ominous accounts; superstitious prognostications.

How are superstitious men hagged out of their wits with the fancy of omens, foreholdings, and old wives tales! L'Estrange.

FOREIGN. adj. [forain, Fr. forano, Span. from foris, Lat.]

1. Not of this country; not domestick.

Your son, that with a fearful soul
Leads discontented steps in foreign soil,
This fair alliance quickly shall call home. Shakesp.

The learned correspondence you hold in foreign parts. Milton.

The positions are so far from being new, that they are commonly to be met with in both ancient and modern, domestick and foreign writers. Atterbury.

The parties and divisions amongst us may several ways bring destruction upon our country, at the same time that our united force would secure us against all the attempts of a foreign enemy. Addison's Freeh.

2. Alien; remote; not allied; not belonging; without relation. It is often used with to; but more properly with from.

I must dissemble,
And speak a language foreign to my heart. Addison.

Fame is a good so wholly foreign to our natures, that we have no faculty in the soul adapted to it, nor any organ in the body to relish it, placed out of the possibility of fruition. Addison.

This design is not foreign from some people's thoughts. Swift.

3. Excluded; not admitted; held at a distance.

They will not stick to say you envied him;
And fearing he would rise, he was so virtuous,
Kept him a foreign man still; which so griev'd him,
That he ran mad and died. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

4. [In law.] A foreign plea, placitum forinsecum; as being a plea out of the proper court of justice.

5. Extraneous; adventitious in general.

There are who, fondly studious of increase,
Rich foreign mould in their ill-natur'd land
Induce. Philips.

FO'REIGNER. n. s. [from foreign.] A man that comes from another country; not a native; a stranger.

Joy is such a foreigner,
So mere a stranger to my thoughts, I know
Not how to entertain him. Denham's Sophy.

To this false foreigner you give your throne,
And wrong'd a friend, a kinsman, and a son.
Dryden's Æn.

Water is the only native of England made use of in punch; but the lemons, the brandy, the sugar, and the nutmegs, are all foreigners. Addison.

Nor could the majesty of the English crown appear in a greater lustre, either to foreigners or subjects. Swift.

FO'REIGNNESS. n. s. [from foreign.] Remoteness; want of relation to something.

Let not the foreignness of the subject hinder you from endeavouring to set me right.

To FOREIMA'GINE. v. a. [fore and imagine.] To conceive or fancy before proof.

We are within compass of a foreimagined possibility in that behalf. Camden's Remains.

Now cease, ye damsels, your delights forepast;
Enough it is that all the day is your's. Spenser.
My forepast proofs, howe'er the matter fall,
Shall tax my fears of little vanity,
Having vainly fear'd too little. Shakesp.

Such is the treaty which he negociates with us, an offer and tender of a reconciliation, an act of oblivion, of all forepast sins, and of a new covenant. Hammond on Fundamentals.

FOREPOSSE'SSED. adj. [fore and possess.] Preoccupied; prepossessed; preengaged.

The testimony either of the ancient fathers, or of other classical divines, may be clearly and abundantly answered to the satisfaction of any rational man, not extremely forepossessed with prejudice. Sanderson.

FORERA'NK. n. s. [fore and rank.] First rank; front.

Yet leave our cousin Catherine here with us;
She is our capital demand, compris'd
Within the forerank of our articles. Shakesp.

FORERECI'TED. adj. [fore and recite.] Mentioned or enumerated before.

Bid him recount
The forerecited practices, whereof
We cannot feel too little, hear too much. Shakesp.

To FORERU'N. v. a. [fore and run.]

1. To come before as an earnest of something following; to introduce as an harbinger.

Against ill chances men are ever merry;
But heaviness foreruns the good event. Shakesp.
The sun
Was set, and twilight from the East came on,
Forerunning night. Milton's Parad. Lost.
She bids me hope; oh dear'st, she pities me!
And pity still foreruns approaching love,
As lightning does the thunder. Dryden.

2. To precede; to have the start of.

I heard it to be a maxim at Dublin to follow, if not foreruns, all that is or will be practised in London. Graunt.

FORERU'NNER. n. s. [from forerun.]

1. An harbinger; a messenger sent before to give notice of the approach of those that follow.

The six strangers seek for you, madam, to take their leave; and there is a forerunner come from a seventh, the prince of Morocco. Shakesp.

A cock was sacrificed as the forerunner of day and the sun, thereby acknowledging the light of life to be derived from the divine bounty, the daughter of Providence. Stilling fleet.

My elder brothers, my forerunners came,
Rough draughts of nature, ill design'd, and lame:
Blown off, like blossoms, never made to bear;
'Till I came finish'd, her last labour'd care. Dryd.

2. A prognostick; a sign foreshowing any thing.

O Eve! some further change awaits us nigh,
Which heav'n, by these mute signs in nature, shews
Forerunners of his purpose. Milton's Par. Lost.

Loss of sight is the misery of life, and usually the forerunner of death. South.

The keeping insensible perspiration up in due measure is the cause as well as sign of health, and the least deviation from that due quantity, the certain forerunner of a disease. Arbuthnot.

Already opera prepares the way,
The sure forerunner of her gentle sway. Pope.

To FORESAY'. v. a. [fore and say.] To predict; to prophesy; to foretell.

1. To see beforehand; to see what has not yet happened; to have prescience; to foreknow.

The first of them could things to come foresee;
The next, could of things present best advise;
The third, things past could keep in memory.
Fairy Queen.

If there be any thing foreseen that is not usual, be armed for it by any hearty though a short prayer, and an earnest resolution beforehand, and then watch when it comes. Taylor.

At his foreseen approach, already quake
The Caspian kingdoms and Meotian lake:
Their seers behold the tempest from afar,
And threat'ning oracles denounce the war. Dryd.

2. To provide for: with to. Out of use.

A king against a storm must foresee to a convenient stock of treasure. Bacon.

To FORESHAME. v. a. [fore and shame.] To shame; to bring reproach upon.

Oh bill, foreshaming
Those rich-left heirs, that let their fathers lie
Without a monument. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

To FO'RESHEW. v. a. [See FORESHOW.]

FO'RESHIP. n. s. [fore and ship.] The anterior part of the ship.

The shipmen would have cast anchors out of the foreship. Acts, xxvii. 30.

To FORESHO'RTEN. v. a. [fore and shorten.] To shorten figures for the sake of shewing those behind.

The greatest parts of the body ought to appear foremost: and he forbids the foreshortenings, because they make the parts appear little.
Dryden's Dufresnoy.

To FO'RESHOW. v. a. [fore and show.]

1. To discover before it happens; to predict; to prognosticate.

Christ had called him to be a witness of his death, and resurrection from the dead, according to that which the prophets and Moses had foreshewed. Hooker.

Whose purple blush the day foreshows. Denham.

You chose to withdraw yourself from publick business, when the face of heaven grew troubled, and the frequent shifting of the wind foreshowed a storm. Dryden.

2. To represent before it comes.

What else is the law but the gospel foreshew'd
What other the gospel than the law fulfilled?
Hooker.

FO'RESIGHT. n. s. [fore and sight.]

1. Prescience; prognostication; foreknowlege. The accent anciently on the last syllable.

Let Eve, for I have drench'd her eyes,
Here sleep below; while thou to foresight wak'st,
As once thou slept'st, whilst she to life was form'd.
Milton.

2. Provident care of futurity.

He had a sharp foresight, and working wit,
That never idle was, ne once could rest a whit
Spenser

In matters of arms he was both skilful and industrious, and as well in foresight as resolution present and great. Hayward

Difficulties and temptations will more easily be born or avoided, if with prudent foresight we arm ourselves against them. Rogers.

FORESI'GHTFUL. adj. [foresight and full.] Prescient; provident.

Death gave him no such pangs as the foresightful care he had of his silly successor. Sidney.

To FORESI'GNIFY. v. a. [fore and signify.] To betoken beforehand; to foreshow; to typify.

Discoveries of Christ already present, whose future coming the Psalms did but foresignify. Hook.

Yet as being past times noxious, where they light
On man, beast, plant, wasteful and turbulent,
They oft foresignify, and threaten ill. Milton.

FO'RESKIN. n. s. [fore and skin.] The prepuce.

Their own hand
An hundred of the faithless foe shall slay,
And for a dow'r their hundred foreskins pay,
Be Michol thy reward. Cowley's Davideis.

FO'RESKIRT. n. s. [fore and skirt.] The pendulous or loose part of the coat before.

A thousand pounds a year for pure respect!
No other obligation?
That promises more thousands: honour's train
Is longer than his foreskirt. Shak. Henry VIII.

To FORESLA'CK. v. a. [fore and slack.] To neglect by idleness.

It is a great pity that so good an opportunity was omitted, and so happy an occasion foreslacked, that might have been the eternal good of the land. Spenser's State of Ireland.

To FORESLO'W. v. a. [fore and slow.]

1. To delay; to hinder; to impede; to obstruct.

No stream, no wood, no mountain could foreslow
Their hasty pace. Fairfax.

Now the illustrious nymph return'd again,
Brings every grace triumphant in her train;
The wond'ring Nereids, though they rais'd no storm,
Foreslow'd her passage to behold her form. Dryd.

2. To neglect; to omit.

When the rebels were on Blackheath, the king knowing well that it stood him upon, by how much the more he had hitherto protracted the time in not encountering them, by so much the sooner to dispatch with them, that it might appear to have been no coldness in foreslowing, but wisdom in chusing his time, resolved with speed to assail them. Bacon's Henry VII.

Our good purposes foreslowed are become our tormentors upon our death-bed. Bishop Hall.

Chremes, how many fishers do you know
That rule their boats and use their nets aright,
That neither wind, nor time, nor tide foreslow?
Some such have been: but, ah! by tempests spite
Their boats are lost; while we may sit and moan
That few were such, and now these few are none.
P. Fletch.

To FORESLO'W. v. n. To be dilatory; to loiter.

This may plant courage in their quailing breasts,
For yet is hope of life and victory:
Forslow no longer, make we hence amain. Shak.

To FORESPE'AK. v. n. [fore and speak.]

1. To predict; to foresay; to foreshow; to foretell.

Old Godfrey of Winchester, thinketh no ominous forespeaking to lie in names. Camden's Rem.

After him came spurring hard
A gentleman, almost forespent with speed. Shak.

2. Forepassed; past. [Fore and spent.]

Is not enough thy evil life forespent? F. Queen.
You shall find his vanities forespent
Were but the outside of the Roman Brutus,
Covering discretion with a coat of folly. Shakesp.

3. Bestowed before.

We must receive him
According to the honour of his sender;
And towards himself, his goodness forespent on us,
We must extend our notice. Shakesp.

FORESPU'RRER. n. s. [fore and spur.] One that rides before.

A day in April never came so sweet,
To show how costly Summer was at hand,
As this forespurrer comes before his lord. Shak.

FO'REST. n. s. [forest, Fr. foresta, Ital.]

1. A wild uncultivated tract of ground interspersed with wood.

By many tribulations we enter into the kingdom of heaven, because, in a forest of many wolves, sheep cannot chuse but feed in continual danger of life. Hooker.

Macbeth shall never vanquish'd be, until
Great Birnham-wood to Dunsinane's high hill
Shall come against him.
——That will never be:
Who can impress the forest, bid the tree
Unfix his earth-bound root. Shak. Macbeth.

There be airs, which the physicians advise their patients to remove unto, which commonly are plain champaigns, but grasing, and not overgrown with heath; or else timber-shades, as in forests. Bacon.

How the first forest rais'd its shady head. Roscom.

2. [In law.] A certain territory of woody grounds and fruitful pastures, privileged for wild beasts, and fowls of forests, chase, and warren, to rest and abide in, in the safe protection of the king for his pleasure. The manner of making forests is this: the king sends out his commission, directed to certain persons, for viewing, perambulating, and bounding the place that he has a mind to afforest: which returned into Chancery, proclamation is made, that none shall hunt any wild beasts within that precinct, without licence; after which he appoints ordinances, laws, and officers for the preservation of the vert and venison; and this becomes a forest by matter of record. The properties of a forest are these: a forest, as it is strictly taken, cannot be in the hands of any but the king, who hath power to grant commission to a justice in eyre for the forest; the courts; the officers for preserving the vert and venison, as the justices of the forest, the warden or keeper, the verders, the foresters, agistors, regarders, bailiffs, and beedles. The chief property of a forest is the swainmote, which is no less incident to it than the court of pyepowders to a fair. Cowel.

To FORESTA'LL. v. a. [yorstallan, Sax.]

1. To anticipate; to take up beforehand.

If thou be master-gunner, spend not all
That thou can'st speak at once; but husband it,
And give men turns of speech; do not forestall
By lavishness thine own and others wit,
As if thou mad'st thy will. Herbert.

What need a man forestall his date of grief,
And run to meet what he would most avoid. Milt.

2. To hinder by preoccupation or prevention.

And though good luck prolonged hath thy date,
Yet death then would the like mishap forestall.
Fairy Queen.

What's in prayer, but this twofold force
To be forstalled ere we come to fall,
Or pardon'd being down. Shakesp. Hamlet.

But for my tears,
I had forestall'd this dear and deep rebuke,
Ere you with grief had spoke. Shakesp.

If you covet death, as utmost end
Of misery, so thinking to evade
The penalty pronounc'd, doubt not but God
Hath wiselier arm'd his vengeful ire, than so
To be forestall'd. Milton's Parad. Lost.

I will not forestall your judgment of the rest. Pope.

3. To seize or gain possession of before another; to buy before another, in order to raise the price.

He bold spake, Sir knight, if knight thou be,

Remit thy other forfeits. Shakesp.

Th' execution leave to high disposal,
And let another hand, not thine, exact
Thy penal forfeit from thyself. Milton's Agonistes.

Thy life, Melantius! I am come to take,
Of which foul treason does a forfeit make.
Waller.

2. A person obnoxious to punishment; one whose life is forfeited by his offence. Now obsolete.

Your brother is a forfeit of the law,
And you but waste your words. Shakesp.

Claudio whom here you have warrant to execute, is no greater forfeit to the law than Angelo, who hath sentenced him. Shakesp.

To FO'RFEIT. v. a. [from the noun.] To lose by some breach of condition; to lose by some offence.

If then a man, on light conditions, gain
A great estate to him, and his, for ever:
If wilfully he forfeit it again,
Who doth bemoan his heir, or blame the giver?
Davies.

Men displeased God, and consequently forfeited all right to happiness. Boyle.

A father cannot alien the power he has over his child: he may perhaps to some degrees forfeit it, but cannot transfer it. Locke.

FO'RFEIT. participial adj. [from the verb.] Liable to penal seizure; alienated by a crime; lost either as to the right or possession, by breach of conditions.

All the souls that are, were forfeit once;
And he that might the 'vantage best have took,
Found out the remedy. Shakesp. Meas. for Meas.

Beg that thou may'st have leave to hang thyself;
And yet, thy wealth being forfeit to the state,
Thou hast not left the value of a cord. Shakesp.

This now fenceless world,
Forfeit to death. Milton.

Straight all his hopes exhal'd in empty smoke,
And his long toils were forfeit for a look. Dryden.

Methought with wond'rous ease he swallow'd down
His forfeit honour, to betray the town. Dryden.

How the murd'rer paid his forfeit breath;
What lands so distant from that scene of death,
But trembling heard the fame! Pope's Odyssey.

FO'RFEITABLE. adj. [from forfeit.] Possessed on conditions, by the breach of which any thing may be lost.

FO'RFEITURE. n. s. [forfeiture, Fr. from forfeit.]

1. The act of forfeiting; the punishment discharged by loss of something possessed.

2. The thing forfeited; a mulct; a fine.

The court is as well a Chancery to save and debar forfeitures, as a court of common law to decide rights; and there would be work enough in Germany and Italy, if imperial forfeitures should go for good titles. Bacon's War with Spain.

Ancient privileges and acts of grace indulged by former kings, must not without high reason, be revoked by their successors; nor forfeitures be exacted violently, nor penal laws urged rigorously. Taylor.

He fairly abdicates his throne,
He has a forfeiture incurr'd. Swift.

FORGA'VE. The preterite of forgive.

FORGE. n. s. [forge, Fr.]

1. The place where iron is beaten into form. In common language we use forge for large work, and smithy for small; but in books the distinction is not kept.

Now behold,
In the quick forge and working-house of thought,
How London doth pour out her citizens. Shakesp.

In other part stood one, who at the forge
Labouring, two massy clods of iron and brass
Had melted. Milton's Par. Lost.

Th' o'er labour'd Cyclop from his hollow mines,
Th' Æolian forge exhausted of its fires. Pope.

2. Any place where any thing is made or shaped.

From no other forge hath proceeded a strange conceit, that to serve God with any set form of common prayer is superstitious. Hooker.

3. Manufacture of metalline bodies; the act of working.

In the greater bodies the forge was easy, the matter being ductile and sequacious and obedient to the stroke of the artificer, and apt to be drawn, formed and moulded. Bacon.

To FORGE. v. a. [forger, old Fr.]

1. To form by the hammer; to beat into shape.

The queen of martials,
And Mars himself conducted them; both which being forg'd of gold,
Must needs have golden furniture. Chapman's Il.

Tyger with tyger, bear with bear you'll find
In leagues offensive and defensive join'd;
But lawless man the anvil dares profane,
And forge that steel by which a man is slain,
Which earth at first for plough-shares did afford,
Nor yet the smith had learn'd to form a sword.
Tate's Juvenal

2. To make by any means.

He was a kind of nothing, titleless,
'Till he had forg'd himself a name i' th' fire
Of burning Rome. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

His heart's his mouth:
What his breast forges, that his tongue must vent.
Shakesp

Those names that the schools forged, and put into the mouths of scholars, could never get admittance into common use, or obtain the licence of publick approbation. Locke.

3. To counterfeit; to falsify.

Were I king,
I should cut off the nobles for their lands;
For my more having would be but as sauce
To make me hunger more, that I should forge
Quarrels unjust against the good and loyal,
Destroying them for wealth. Shakesp. Macbeth.

FO'RGER. n. s. [from forge.]

1. One who makes or forms.

2. One who counterfeits any thing; a falsifier.

As in stealing, if there were no receivers there would be no thieves; so in slander, if there were fewer spreaders, there would be fewer forgers of libels. Government of the Tongue.

No forger of lies willingly and wittingly furnishes out the means of his own detection. West.

FO'RGERY. n. s. [from forge.]

1. The crime of falsification.

Has your king married the lady Gray?
And now, to sooth your forgery and his,
Sends me a paper to persuade me patience. Shak.

Nothing could have been easier than for the Jews, the enemies of Jesus Christ, to have disproved these facts, had they been false, to have shewn their falshood, and to have convicted them of forgery. Stephen's Sermons.

A forgery, in setting a false name to a writing, which may prejudice another's fortune, the law punishes with the loss of ears; but has inflicted no adequate penalty for doing the same thing in print, though books sold under a false name are so many forgeries. Swift.

2. Smith's work; fabrication; the act of the forge.

He ran on embattled armies clad in iron,
And weaponless himself,
Made arms ridiculous, useless the forgery
Of brazen shield and spear, the hammer'd cuirass,
Chalybean temper'd steel, and frock of mail
Adamantean proof. Milton's Agonistes.

To FORGET. v. a. preter. forgot; part. forgotten, or forgot. [ꝑoꝛgyꝛcan, Sax. vergeten, Dut.]

1. To lose memory of; to let go from the remembrance.

That is not forgot
Which ne'er I did remember; to my knowledge,
I never in my life did look on him. Shakesp.

When I am forgotten, as I shall be,
And sleep in dull cold marble, where no mention
Of me must more be heard. Shakesp.

Forget not thy friend in thy mind, and be not unmindful of him in thy riches. Eccles. xxxvii. 6.

No sooner was our deliverance compleated, but we forgot our danger and our duty. Atterbury.

Alive, ridiculous; and dead, forgot. Pope

2. Not to attend; to neglect.

Can a woman forget her sucking child? Yea, they may forget; yet I will not forget thee. Isa. xlix. 5.

If we might forget ourselves, or forget God; if we might disregard our reason, and live by humour and fancy in any thing, or at any time, or at any place, it would be as lawful to do the same in every thing, at every time, and every place. Law.

The mass of mean forgotten things. Anon.

FORGE'TFUL. adj. [from forget.]

1. Not retaining the memory of.
2. Causing oblivion; oblivious.

But when a thousand rolling years are past,
So long their punishments and penance last,
Whole droves of minds are by the driving god
Compell'd to drink the deep Lethean flood,
In large forgetful draughts to steep the cares
Of their past labours, and their irksome years.
Dryden's Æneid.

3. Inattentive; negligent; neglectful; careless.

Be not forgetful to entertain strangers. Heb. xii. 2.

The queen is comfortless, and we forgetful
In our long absence. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

Have you not love to bear with me,
When that rash humour, which my mother gave me,
Makes me forgetful? Shakesp. Julius Cæsar.

I, in fact, a real interest have,
Which to my own advantage I would save;
And, with the usual courtier's trick, intend
To serve myself, forgetful of my friend. Prior.

FORGE'TFULNESS. n. s. [from forgetful.]

1. Oblivion; cessation to remember; loss of memory.

O gentle sleep!
Nature's soft nurse, how have I frighted thee,
That thou no more wilt weigh my eyelids down,
And steep my senses in forgetfulness! Shakesp.

All birds and beasts lie hush'd; sleep steals away
The wild desires of men and toils of day;
And brings, descending through the silent air,
A sweet forgetfulness of human care. Pope's Statius.

2. Negligence; neglect; inattention.

The church of England is grievously charged with forgetfulness of her duty. Hooker.

FO'RGETIVE. adj. [from forge.] That may forge or produce. A word, I believe peculiar to Shakespeare.

Good sherris sack ascends me into the brain, dries me there all the foolish, dull vapours, makes it apprehensive, quick, forgetive, full of nimble shapes, which, delivered to the voice, becomes excellent wit. Shakesp.

FORGE'TTER. n. s. [from forget.]

1. One that forgets.
2. A careless person.

To* FORGI'VE. v. a. [ꝑoꝛgiꝼan, Sax.]

1. To pardon a person; not to punish.

Then heaven forgive him too! Shakesp.

I do beseech your grace for charity;
If ever any malice in your heart
Were hid against me, now forgive me frankly.
—Sir Thomas Lovell, I as free forgive you,
As I would be forgiven: I forgive all. Shakesp.

Slowly provok'd, she easily forgives. Prior.

2. To pardon a crime.

The people that dwell therein shall be forgiven their iniquity. Is. xxxiii. 24.

If prayers
Could alter high decrees, I to that place
Would speed before thee, and be louder heard,
That on my head all might be visited,
Thy frailty and infirmer sex forgiven,
To me committed, and by me expos'd. Miller.

3. To remit; not exact debt or penalty.

The lord of that servant was moved with compassion, loosed him, and forgave him the debt. Mat. xviii. 27.

FORGI'VENESS. n. s. [ꝑoꝛgiꝼennyꝛe, Sax.]

1. The act of forgiving.

To the Lord our God belong mercies and forgivenesses. Dan.

2. Pardon of an offender.

Thou hast promised repentance and forgiveness to them that have sinned against thee. Prayer of Ma.

Exchange forgiveness with me, noble Hamlet;
Mine and my father's death come not upon thee,
Nor thine on me. Shakesp.

Forgiveness to the injur'd does belong;
But they ne'er pardon who commit the wrong. Dryden.

3. Pardon of an offence.

God has certainly promised forgiveness of sin to every one who repents. South.

4. Tenderness; willingness to pardon.

Here are introduced more heroick principles of meekness, forgiveness, bounty and magnanimity, than all the learning of the heathens could invent. Spratt.

Mercy above did hourly plead
For her resemblance here below;
And mild forgiveness intercede,
To stop the coming blow. Dryden.

5. Remission of a fine, penalty, or debt.

FORGI'VER. n. s. [from forgive.] One who pardons.

FORGO'T. } part. pass. of forget.
FORGO'TTEN. } Not remembered.

This song shall not be forgotten. Deut. xxxi. 21.

Great Strafford! worthy of that name, though all
Of thee could be forgotten, but thy fall. Denham.

The soft ideas of the chearful note,
Lightly receiv'd, were easily forgot. Prior.

To* FORHA'IL. v. a. [An old word. Probably for forhaul, from for and haul.] To harass; tear; torment.

All this long tale
Nought easeth the care that doth me forhail.
Spenser's Past.

FORK. n. s. [furca, Lat. fforch, Welsh; fourche, Fr.]

1. An instrument divided at the end into two or more points or prongs, used on many occasions.

At Midsummer down with the brambles and brakes,
And after abroad with thy forks and thy rakes.
Tusser.

The vicar first, and after him the crew,
With forks and staves the felon to pursue,
Ran Coll our dog. Dryden's Nun's Priest.

I dine with forks that have but two prongs.
Swift.

2. It is sometimes used for the point of an arrow.

The bow is bent and drawn: make from the shaft.
—Let it fall rather, though the fork invade
The region of my heart. Shakesp. King Lear.

3. A point.

Several are amazed at the wisdom of the ancients, that represented a thunderbolt with three forks, since nothing could have better explained its triple quality of piercing, burning and melting. Addison.

To* FORK. v. n. [from the noun.] To shoot into blades, as corn does out of the ground.

The corn beginneth to fork. Mortimer's Husb.

FO'RKED. adj. [from fork.] Opening into two or more parts.

Naked he was, for all the world, like a forked radish, with a head fantastically carved upon it with a knife. Shakesp.

Sometimes we see a cloud that's dragonish,
A forked mountain, or blue promontory. Shak.

Come, shall we go and kill us venison?
And yet it irks me the poor dappled fools
Should in their own confines, with forked heads,
Have their round haunches gor'd. Shakesp.

He would have spoke:
But hiss for hiss return'd, with forked tongue
To forked tongue. Milton's Parad. Lost.

Ye dragons, whose contagious breath
Peoples the dark retreats of death,
Change your fierce hissing into joyful song,
And praise your Maker with your forked tongue.
Roscommon.

FO'RKEDLY. adv. [from forked.] In a forked form.

FO'RKEDNESS. n. s. [from forked.] The quality of opening into two parts or more.

FO'RKHEAD. n. s. [fork and head.] Point of an arrow.

It seizing, no way enter might;
But back resounding, left the forkhead keen,
Eftsoons it fled away, and might no where be seen. Fairy Queen.

FO'RKY. adj. [from fork.] Forked; furcated; opening into two parts.

The smiling infant in his hand shall take
The crested basilisk and speckled snake;
Pleas'd the green lustre of the scales survey,
And with their forky tongue and pointless sting shall play. Pope's Messiah

FORLO'RE. [The preterite and participle of the Saxon ꝑoꝛleoꝑan, in Dutch verloren.] Deserted; forsook; forsaken. Obsolete.

Such as Diana by the sandy shore
Of swift Eurotas, or on Cynthus' green,
Where all the nymphs have her forlore. F. Queen

That wretched world he 'gan for to abhor,
And mortal life 'gan loth as thing forlore.
Fairy Queen.

Thus fell the trees, with noise the deserts roar
The beasts their caves, the birds their nests forlore. Fairfax

FORLO'RN. adj. [ꝑoꝛloꝑen, from ꝑoꝛleoꝑan, Sax. verloren, Dut.]

1. Deserted; destitute; forsaken; wretched; helpless; solitary.

Make them seek for that they wont to scorn,
Of fortune and of hope at once forlorn. Hubberd.

Tell me, good Hobinol, what gars thee greet?
What! hath some wolf thy tender lambs yborn?
Or is thy bagpipe broke, that sounds so sweet?
Or art thou of thy loved lass forlorn? Spenser

In every place was heard the lamentations of women and children; every thing shewed the heaviness of the time, and seemed as altogether lost and forlorn. Knolles's History.

How can I live without thee! how forego
Thy sweet converse, and love so dearly join'd,
To live again in those wild woods forlorn! Milton.

Their way
Lies through the perplex'd paths of this drear wood;
The nodding horrour of whose shady brows,
Threat the forlorn and wand'ring passenger. Milt

My only strength and stay! forlorn of thee,
Whither shall I betake me, where subsist! Milton.

Like a declining statesman, left forlorn
To his friends pity and pursuers scorn. Denham.

The good old man, forlorn of human aid,
For vengeance to his heav'nly patron pray'd. Dry.

Philomel laments forlorn. Fenton.

As some sad turtle his lost love deplores,
Thus, far from Delia, to the winds I mourn;
Alike unheard, unpity'd, and forlorn. Pope.

2. Taken away. This sense shews that it is the participle of an active verb, now lost.

When as night hath us of light forlorn,
I wish that day would shortly reascend. Spenser.

What is become of great Acrates' son!
Or where hath he hung up his mortal blade,
That hath so many haughty conquests won?
Is all his force forlorn, and all his glory done?
Fairy Queen.

3. Small; despicable: in a ludicrous sense.

He was so forlorn, that his dimensions to any thick sight were invincible. Shak. Henry IV.

FORLO'RN. n. s.

1. A lost, solitary, forsaken man.

Henry
Is of a King become a banish'd man,
And forc'd to live in Scotland a forlorn. Shakesp.

2. FORLORN Hope. The soldiers who are sent first to the attack, and are therefore doomed to perish.

Criticks in plume,
Who lolling on our foremost benches sit,
And still charge first, the true forlorn of wit.
Dryden.

FORLO'RNNESS. n. s. [from forlorn.] Destitution; misery; solitude.

Men displeased God, and consequently forfeited all right to happiness; even whilst they completed the forlornness of their condition by the lethargy of not being sensible of it. Boyle.

To FORLY'E, v. n. [from fore and lye.] To lye before.

Knit with a golden baldric, which forlay
Athwart her snowy breast, and did divide
Her dainty paps, which, like young fruit in May,
Now little 'gan to swell; and being ty'd,
Through her thin weed, their places only signify'd.
Fairy Queen.

FORM. n. s. [forma, Lat. forme, Fr.]

1. The external appearance of any thing; representation; shape.

Nay, women are frail too,
——Ay, as the glasses where they view themselves
Which are as easy broke as they make forms.
Shakesp.

It stood still; but I could not discern the form thereof. Job.

Gold will endure a vehement fire, without any change, and after it has been divided by corrosive liquors into invisible parts; yet may presently be precipitated, so as to appear again in its form.
Grew's Cosmol. Sac.

Matter, as wise logicians say,
Cannot without a form subsist;
And form, say I as well as they,
Must fail, if matter brings no grist. Swift.

2. Being, as modified by a particular shape.

When noble benefits shall prove
Not well dispos'd, the mind grown once corrupt,
They turn to vicious forms, ten times more ugly
Than ever they were fair. Shakesp. Hen. VIII.

Here toils and death, and death's half-brother, sleep,
Forms terrible to view, their sentry keep;
With anxious pleasures of a guilty mind,
Deep frauds before, and open force behind.
Dryden.

3. Particular model or modification.

He that will look into many parts of Asia and America, will find men reason there perhaps as acutely as himself, who yet never heard of a syllogism, nor can reduce any one argument to those forms. Locke.

It lengthens out every act of worship, and produces more lasting and permanent impressions in the mind, than those which accompany any transient form of words that are uttered in the ordinary method of religious worship. Addison.

4. Beauty; elegance of appearance.

He hath no form nor comeliness. Isa. liii. 2.

5. Regularity; method; order.

What he spoke, though it lack'd form a little,
Was not like madness. Shakesp. Hamlet.

6. External appearance without the essential qualities; empty show.

Then those whom form of laws
Condemn'd to die, when traitors judg'd [illegible] cause. Dryden.

They were young heirs sent only for forms from schools, where they were not suffered to stay three months. Swift.

7. Ceremony; external rites.

Though well we may not pass upon his life,
Without the form of justice; yet our pow'r
Shall do a court'sy to our wrath, which men
May blame, but not controul. Shakesp. King Lear.

A long table, and a square table, or a seat about the walls, seem things of form, but are things of substance; for at a long table, a few at the upper end, in effect, sway all the business; but in the other form, there is more use of the counsellors opinions that sit lower. Bacon's Essays.

That the parliaments of Ireland might want no decent or honourable form used in England, he caused a particular act to pass, that the lords of Ireland should appear in parliament robes. Davies.

Their general used, in all dispatches made by himself, to observe all decency in their forms.
Clarendon.

How am I to interpret, sir, this visit?
Is it a compliment of form, or love?
A. Phil. Dist. Moth.

8. Stated method; established practice; ritual and prescribed mode.

He who affirmeth speech to be necessary amongst all men, throughout the world, doth not thereby import that all men must necessarily speak one kind of language; even so the necessity of policy and regimen in all churches may be held, without holding any one certain form to be necessary in them all. Hooker.

Nor are constant forms of prayer more likely to flat and hinder the spirit of prayer and devotion than unpremeditated and confused variety to distract and lose it. King Charles.

Nor seek to know
Their process, or the forms of law below. Dryd.

9. A long seat.

If a chair be defined a seat for a single person, with a back belonging to it, then a stool is a seat for a single person without a back; and a form is a seat for several persons, without a back. Watts.

I was seen with her in the manorhouse, sitting with her upon the form, and taken following her into the park. Shakesp.

10. A class; a rank of students.

It will be necessary to see and examine those works which have given so great a reputation to the masters of the first form. Dryden.

11. The seat or bed of a hare.

Now for a clod like hare in form they peer;
Now bolt and cudgel squirrels leap do move;
Now the ambitious lark, with mirrour clear,
They catch, while he, fool! to himself makes love.
Sidney.

Have you observ'd a sitting hare,
List'ning, and fearful of the storm
Of horns and hounds, clap back her ear,
Afraid to keep or leave her form. Prior.

12. Form is the essential, specifical, or distinguishing modification of the matter of which any thing is composed, so as thereby to give it such a peculiar manner of existence. Harris.

In definitions, whether they be framed larger to augment, or stricter to abridge the number of sacraments, we find grace expressly mentioned as their true essential form, and elements as the matter whereunto that form did adjoin itself. Hooker.

13. A formal cause; that which gives essence.

They inferred, if the world were a living creature, it had a soul and spirit, by which they did not intend God, for they did admit of a deity besides, but only the soul or essential form of the universe. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

To FORM. v. a. [formo, Lat.]

1. To make out of materials.

God formed man of the dust of the ground.
Gen. ii. 7.

The liquid ore he drain'd
Into fit molds prepar'd; from which he form'd
First his own tools; then, what might else be wrought
Fusil, or grav'n in metal. Milton.

Determin'd to advance into our room
A creature form'd of earth. Milton.

She form'd the phantom of well-bodied air. Pope.

2. To model to a particular shape or state.

Creature in whom excell'd
Whatever can to sight or thought be form'd,
Holy, divine, good, amiable or sweet. Milton.

Let Eve, for I have drench'd her eyes,
Here sleep below, while thou to foresight wak'st;
As once thou sleep'st, while she to life was form'd.
Milton.

3. To modify; to scheme; to plan.

Lucretius taught him not to form his heroe, to give him piety or valour for his manners. Dryd.

4. To arrange; to combine in any particular manner: as, he formed his troops.

5. To adjust; to settle.

Our differences with the Romanists are thus formed into an interest, and become the design not of single persons, but of corporations and successions. Decay of Piety.

6. To contrive; to coin.

The defeat of the design is the routing of opinions formed for promoting it. Decay of Piety

He dies too soon;
And fate, if possible, must be delay'd:
The thought that labours in my forming brain,
Yet crude and immature, demands more time.
Rowe.

7. To model by education or institution.

Let him to this with easy pains be brought,
And seem to labour when he labours not:
Thus form'd for speed, he challenges the wind,
And leaves the Scythian arrow far behind. Dryd.

FO'RMAL. adj. [formel, Fr. formalis, Lat.]

1. Ceremonious; solemn; precise; exact to affectation.

The justice,
In fair round belly, with good capon lin'd,
With eyes severe, and beard of formal cut,
Full of wise saws and modern instances,
And so he plays his part. Shakesp. As you like it.

Formal in apparel,
In gait and countenance surely like a father.
Shakesp.

Ceremonies be not to be omitted to strangers and formal natures; but the exalting them above the mean is not only tedious, but doth diminish the credit of him that speaks. Bacon.

2. Done according to established rules and methods; not irregular; not sudden; not extemporaneous.

There is not any positive law of men, whether it be general or particular, received by formal express consent, as in councils; or by secret approbation, as in customs it cometh to pass, but may be taken away, if occasion serve. Hooker

As there are formal and written leagues, respective to certain enemies; so there is a natural and tacit confederation amongst all men against the common enemies of human society, so as there needs no intimation or denunciation of the war; but all these formalities the law of nature supplies, as in the case of pirates. Bacon.

3. Regular; methodical.

The formal stars do travel so,
As we their names and courses know;
And he that on their changes looks,
Would think them govern'd by our books. Waller.

4. External; having the appearance but not the essence.

Of formal duty, make no more thy boast;
Thou disobey'st where it concerns me most. Dryd.

5. Depending upon establishment or custom.

Still in constraint your suffering sex remains,
Or bound in formal or in real chains. Pope

6. Having the power of making any thing what it is; constituent; essential.

Of letters the material part is breath and voice; the formal is constituted by the motions and figure of the organs of speech affecting breath with a peculiar sound, by which each letter is discriminated. Holder's Elements of Speech.

Bellarmine agrees in making the formal act of adoration to be subjection to a superior; but without the makes the mere apprehension of excellency to include the formal reason of it: whereas mere excellency, without superiority, doth not require any subjection, but only estimation. Stilling fleet.

The very life and vital motion, and the formal essence and nature of man, is wholly owing to the power of God. Bentley.

7. Retaining its proper and essential characteristick; regular; proper.

Thou shou'dst come like a fury covered with snakes,
Not like a formal man. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleop.

I will not let him stir
'Till I have used th' approved means I have;
With wholesome syrups, drugs, and holy prayers,
To make of him a formal man again. Shakesp.

FO'RMALIST. n. s. [formaliste, Fr. from form.] One who practises external ceremony; one who prefers appearance to reality; one who seems what he is not.

It is a ridiculous thing, and fit for a satyr to persons of judgment, to see what shifts formalists have, and what prospectives to make superficies to seem a body that hath depth and bulk. Bacon

A grave, staunch, skilfully managed face, set upon a grasping aspiring mind, having got many a sly formalist the reputation of a primitive and severe piety. South.

FORMA'LITY. n. s. [formalité, Fr. from form.]

1. Ceremony; established mode of behaviour.

The attire, which the minister of God is by order to use at times of divine service, is but a matter of mere formality, yet such as for comeliness sake hath hitherto been judged not unnecessary. Hooker.

Formalities of extraordinary zeal and piety are never more studied and elaborate than in desperate designs. King Charles.

Many a worthy man sacrifices his peace to formalities of compliment and good manners. L'Estr.

Nor was his attendance on divine offices a matter of formality and custom, but of conscience. Atterbury.

2. Solemn order, method, mode, habit, or dress.

If men forswear the deeds and bonds they draw,
Though sign'd with all formality of law;
And though the signing and the seal proclaim
The baresac'd perjury, and fix the shame. Dryd.

The pretender would have infallibly landed in our northern parts, and found them all sat down in their formalities, as the Gauls did the Roman senators. Swift.

3. External appearance.

To fix on God the formality of faculties, or affections, is the imposture of our fancies, and contradictory to his divinity. Glanville's Scepsis.

4. Essence; the quality by which any thing is what it is.

May not a man vow to A. and B. that he will give a hundred pounds to an hospital? Here the vow is made both to God and to A. and B. But here A. and B. are only witnesses to the vow; but the formality of the vow lies in the promise made to God. Stilling fleet.

To FO'RMALIZE. v. a. [formaliser, Fr. from formal.]

1. To model; to modify. A word not now in use.

The same spirit which anointed the blessed soul of our Saviour Christ, doth so formalise, unite, and actuate his whole race, as if both he and they were so many limbs compacted into one body. Hooker.

2. To affect formality; to be fond of ceremony.

FO'RMALLY. adv. [from formal.]

1. According to established rules, methods, ceremonies or rites.

Formally, according to our law,
Depose him. Shakesp. Richard II.

2. Ceremoniously; stiffly; precisely.

To be stiff and formally reserved, as if the company did not deserve our familiarity, is a downright challenge of homage. Collier on Pride.

3. In open appearance; in a visible and apparent state.

You and your followers do stand formally divided against the authorised guides of the church, and the rest of the people. Hooker.

4. Essentially; characteristically.

This power and dominion is not adequately and formally the image of God, but only a part of it. South.

The Heathens and the Christians may agree in material acts of charity; but that which formally makes this a Christian grace, is the spring from which it flows. Smalridge.

FORMA'TION. n. s. [formation, Fr. from formo, Lat.]

1. The act of forming or generating.

The matter discharged forth of volcano's, and other spiracles, contributes to the formation of meteors. Woodward.

The solids are originally formed of a fluid, from a small point, as appears by the gradual formation of a fœtus. Arbuthnot.

Complicated ideas, growing up under observation, give not the same confusion, as if they were all offered to the mind at once, without your observing the original and formation of them. Watts.

2. The manner in which a thing is formed.

The chorion, a thick membrane obscuring the formation, the dam doth tear asunder. Brown.

FO'RMATIVE. adj. [from formo, Lat.] Having the power of giving form; plastick.

As we have established our assertion of the seminal production of all kinds of animals; so likewise we affirm, that the meanest plant cannot be raised without seed, by any formative power residing in the soil. Bentley's Sermons.

FO'RMER. n. s. [from form.] He that forms; maker; contriver; planner.

The wonderful art and providence of the contriver and former of our bodies, appears in the multitude of intentions he must have in the formation of several parts for several uses. Ray on the Crea.

FO'RMER. adj. [from forma, Sax. first; whence former, and formost, now commonly written foremost, as if derived from before. Foremost is generally applied to place, rank, or degree, and former only to time; for when we say the last rank of the procession is like the former, we respect time rather than place, and mean that which we saw before, rather than that which had precedence in place.]

1. Before another in time.

Thy air,
Thou other gold-bound brow, is like the first:
—A third is like the former. Shakesp. Macbeth.

2. Mentioned before another.

A bad author deserves better usage than a bad critick: a man may be the former merely through the misfortune of an ill judgment; but he cannot be the latter without both that and an ill temper. Pope

3. Past: as this was the custom in former times.

The present point of time is all thou hast,
The future doubtful, and the former past. Harte.

FO'RMERLY. adv. [from former.] In times past.

The places were all of them formerly the cool retirements of the Romans, where they used to hide themselves among the woods and mountains, during the excessive heats of their Summer. Add.

As an animal degenerates by diseases, the animal salts, formerly benign, approach towards an alkaline nature. Arbuthnot.

FO'RMIDABLE. adj. [formidabilis, Lat. formidable, Fr.] Terrible; dreadful; tremendous; terrifick; to be feared.

I swell my preface into a volume, and make it formidable, when you see so many pages behind. Dryden's Æn. Dedication.

They seem'd to fear the formidable sight,
And roll'd their billows on, to speed his flight. Dryden.

FO'RMIDABLENESS. n. s. [from formidable.]

1. The quality of exciting terror or dread.

2. The thing causing dread.

They rather chuse to be shewed the formidableness of their danger, than by a blind embracing it, to perish. Decay of Piety.

FO'RMIDABLY. adv. [from formidable.] In a terrible manner.

Behold! e'en to remoter shores,
A conquering navy proudly spread;
The British cannon formidably roars. Dryden.

FO'RMLESS. adj. [from form.] Shapeless; without regularity of form.

All form is formless, order orderless.
Save what is opposite to England's love. Shak.

FO'RMULARY. n. s. [formulaire, Fr. from formule.] A book containing stated and prescribed models or set forms.

FO'RMULARY. adj. Ritual; prescribed; stated.

FO'RMULE. n. s. [formule, Fr. formula, Lat.] A set or prescribed model.

To FO'RNICATE. v. a. [from fornix, Lat.] To commit lewdness.

It is a new way to fornicate at a distance. Brown.

FORNICA'TION. n. s. [fornication, Fr. fornicatio, Lat.]

1. Concubinage or commerce with an unmarried woman.

Bless me! what a fry of fornication is at the door. Shakesp.

The law ought to be strict against fornications and adulteries; for, if there were universal liberty, the increase of mankind would be but like that of foxes at best. Graunt.

2. In Scripture, sometimes idolatry.

Thou didst trust in thine own beauty, thou playedst the harlot, because of thy renown, and pouredst out thy fornications on every one that passed by. Ezek. xvi. 15.

FORNI'CATOR. n. s. [fornicateur, Fr. from fornix, Lat.] One that has commerce with unmarried women.

A fornicator or adulterer steals the soul, as well as dishonours the body of his neighbour. Taylor.

FORNICA'TRESS. n. s. [from fornicator.] A woman who without marriage cohabits with a man.

See you the fornicatress be removed;
Let her have needful but not slavish means. Shak.

To FORSA'KE. v. a. preter. forsook; part. pass. forsook, or forsaken. [wersaaken, Dut.]

To leave in resentment, neglect, or dislike.

'Twas now the time when first Saul God forsook,
God Saul; the room in's heart wild passions took. Cowley.

Orestes comes in time
To save your honour; Pyrrhus ooels apace;
Prevent his falshood, and forsake him first;
I know you hate him. A. Philips's Distrest Mother.

Daughter of Jove, whose arms in thunder wield
Th' avenging bolt, and shake the dreadful shield,
Forsook by thee, in vain I sought thy aid. Pope.

2. To leave; to go away from; to depart from.

Unwilling I forsook your friendly state,
Commanded by the gods, and forc'd by fate.
Dryden.

3. To desert; to fail.

Truth, modesty, and shame the world forsook;
Fraud, avarice, and force their places took. Dryd.
When ev'n the flying sails were seen no more,
Forsaken of all sight she left the shore. Dryden.
Their purple majesty, [ness
And all those outward shows which we call great-
Languish and droop, seem empty and forsaken,
And draw the wond'ring gazers eyes no more. Rowe.

FORSA'KER. n. s. [from forsake.] Deserter; one that forsakes.

Thou didst deliver us into the hands of lawless enemies, most hateful forsakers of God. Apocryphal.

FORSOO'TH. adv. [ꝼoꝛꝛoðe, Sax.]

1. In truth; certainly; very well. It is used almost always in an ironical or contemptuous sense.

Wherefore doth Lysander
Deny your love, so rich within his soul,
And tender me, forsooth, affection! Shakesp.
A fit man, forsooth, to govern a realm, who had so goodly government in his own estate. Hayward.
Unlearned persons use such letters as justly express the power or sound of their speech; yet forsooth, we say, write not true English, or true French. Holder on Speech.
In the East Indies a widow, who has any regard to her character, throws herself into the flames of her husband's funeral pile, to shew, forsooth, that she is faithful to the memory of her deceased lord. Addison's Freeholder.
She would cry out murder, and disturb the whole neighbourhood; and when John came running down the stairs to enquire what the matter was, nothing, forsooth, only her maid had stuck a pin wrong in her gown Arbuth. Hist of John Bull.
Some question the genuineness of his books, because, forsooth, they cannot discover in them the flumen orationis that Cicero speaks of Baker.

2. It is supposed once to have been a word of honour in address to women. It is probable that an inferior, being called, shewed his attention by answering in the word yes, forsooth, which in time lost its true meaning; and instead of a mere exclamatory interjection, was supposed a compellation. It appears in Shakespeare to have been used likewise to men.

Our old English word forsooth has been changed for the French madam. Guardian.

To FORSWE'AR, v. a. preter. forswore: part. forsworn. [ꝼoꝛꝛþæꝛian, Sax.]

1. To renounce upon oath.

I firmly vow
Never to wooe her more; but do forswear her,
As one unworthy all the former favours
That I have fondly flatter'd her withal. Shakesp.

2. To deny upon oath.

And that self chain about his neck,
Which he forswore most monstrously to have. Shak.
Observe the wretch who hath his faith forsook,
How clear his voice, and how assured his look!
Like innocence, and as serenely bold
As truth, how loudly he forswears thy gold!
Dryd. Juv.

3. With the reciprocal pronoun; as, to forswear himself to be perjured; to swear falsely.

To leave my Julia, shall I be forsworn?
To leave fair Sylvia, shall I be forsworn?
To wrong my friend, shall I be much forsworn?
And ev'n that power which gave me first my oath,
Provokes me to this threefold perjury. Shakesp.
One says, he never should endure the sight
Of that forsworn, that wrongs both lands and laws.
Daniel.
I too have sworn, ev'n at the altar sworn,
Eternal love and endless faith to Theseus;
And yet am false, forsworn: the hallow'd shrine,
That heard me swear, is witness to my falshood.
Smith.

To FORSWEAR. v. n. To swear falsely; to commit perjury.

Take heed; for he holds vengeance in his hand,
To hurl upon their heads that break his law.
—And that same vengeance doth hurl on thee,
For false forswearing, and for murder too. Shakesp.

FORSWE'ARER. n. s. [from forswear.] One who is perjured.

FORT. n. s. [fort, Fr.] A fortified house; a castle.

They erected a fort, which they called the fort de l'or: and from thence they bolted like beasts of the forest. Bacon.
Now to their fort they are about to send
For the loud engines which their isle defend. Wall.
He that views a fort to take it,
Plants his artillery 'gainst the weakest part. Denh.
My fury does, like jealous forts, pursue
With death ev'n strangers who but come to view.
Dryden.

FO'RTED. adj. [from fort.] Furnished or guarded by forts. Not used now.

Your desert speaks loud, and I should wrong
To lock it in the wards of covert bosom,
When it deserves with characters of brass
A forted residence, 'gainst the tooth of time
And rasure of oblivion. Shakesp. Meas. for Meas

FORTH. adv. [ꝼoꝛð, Sax. whence further and furthest.]

1. Forward; onward in time.

From that day forth I lov'd that face divine;
From that day forth I cast in careful mind
To seek her out. Fairy Queen.

2. Forward in place or order.

Look at the second admonition, and so forth, where they speak in most unchristian manner.
Whitgifte.
Mad Pandarus steps forth, with vengeance vow'd
For Bitias' death. Dryden's Æneid.

3. Abroad; out of doors.

Uncle, I must come forth. Shakesp. Othello.
I have no mind of feasting forth to-night. Shak
Attend you here the door of our stern daughter?

When Winter past, and Summer scarce begun,
Invites them forth to labour in the sun. Dryden.

4. Out away; beyond the boundary of any place.

They will privily relieve their friends that are forth; they will send the enemy secret advertisements; and they will not also stick to draw the enemy privily upon them. Spenser.
Ev'n that sunshine brew'd a show'r for him,
That wash'd his father's fortunes forth of France.
Shakesp.

5. Out into a public character: publick view.

You may set forth the same with farmhouses.
Peacham
But when your troubled country call'd you forth,
Your flaming courage, and your matchless worth,
To fierce contention gave a prosp'rous end. Waller.

6. Thoroughly; from beginning to end. Out of use.

You, cousin,
Whom it concerns to hear this matter forth,
Do with your injuries as seems you best. Shakesp.

7. To a certain degree. Obsolete.

Hence we learn, how far forth we may expect justification and salvation from the sufferings of Christ; no further than we are wrought on by his renewing grace. Hammond.

8. On to the end. Out of use.

I repeated the Ave Maria: the inquisitor bad me say forth; I said I was taught no more.
Memoir in Strype.

FORTH. prep. Out of.

And here's a prophet, that I brought with me
From forth the streets of Pomfret. Shakesp.
Some forth their cabbins peep,
And trembling ask what news, and do hear so
As jealous husbands, what they would not know.
Donne.

FORTHCO'MING. adj. [forth and coming.] Ready to appear; not absconding; not lost.

Carry this mad knave to jail: I charge you see that he be forthcoming. Shak. Taming of a Shrew.
We'll see your trinkets here forthcoming all.

Forthissuing thus, she gave him first to wield
A weighty ax, with truest temper steel'd,
And double edg'd. Pope's Odyssey.

FORTHRI'GHT. adv. [forth and right.] Strait forward; without flexions. Not in use.

He ever going so just with the horse, either forthright or turning, that it seemed as he borrowed the horse's body, so he lent the horse his mind. Sidney.
The river not running forthright, but almost continually winding, as if the lower streams would return to their spring, or that the river had a delight to play with itself. Sidney.
Arrived there, they passed in forthright;
For still to all the gate stood open wide. Fairy Q.
Thither forthright he rode to rouse the prey. Dry.

FORTHRI'GHT. n. s. A straight path.

Here's a maze trod, indeed,
Through forthrights and meanders. Shak. Tempest.

FORTHWI'TH. adv. [forth and with.] Immediately; without delay; at once; straight.

Forthwith he runs, with feigned faithful haste,
Unto his guest; who, after troublous sights
And dreams, 'gan now to take more sound repast.
Spenser.
Few things are so restrained to any one end or purpose, that the same being extinct, they should forthwith utterly become frustrate. Hooker.
Neither did the martial men daily or prosecute the service faintly, but did forthwith quench that fire. Davies on Ireland.
Forthwith began these fury-moving sounds,
The notes of wrath, the musick brought from hell,
The rattling drums. Daniel's Civil War.
The winged heralds, by command
Of sov'reign pow'r, throughout the host proclaim
A solemn council forthwith to be held
At Pandæmonium. Milton's Parad. Lost.
In his passage thither one put into his hand a note of the whole conspiracy, desiring him to read it forthwith, and to remember the giver of it as long as he lived. South.

FO'RTIETH. adj. [from forty.] The fourth tenth; next after the thirty-ninth.

What doth it avail
To be the fortieth man in an entail? Donne.
Burnet says, Scotland is not above a fortieth part in value to the rest of Britain; and, with respect to the profit that England gains from hence, not the four thousandth part. Swift.

FO'RTIFIABLE. adj. [from fortify.] What may be fortified.

FORTIFICA'TION. n. s. [fortification, Fr. from fortify.]

1. The science of military architecture.

Fortification is an art shewing how to fortify a place with ramparts, parapets, moats, and others bulwarks; to the end that a small number of men within may be able to defend themselves, for a considerable time, against the assaults of a numerous army without, so that the enemy, in attacking them, must of necessity suffer great loss. It is either regular or irregular; and, with respect to time, may be distinguished into durable and temporary. Harris.

The Phœnicians, though an unwarlike nation, yet understood the art of fortification. Broome.

2. A place built for strength.

The hounds were uncoupled, and the stag thought better to trust to the nimbleness of his feet, than to the slender fortification of his lodging. Sidney.

Excellent devices were used to make even their sports profitable; images, battles, and fortifications being then delivered to their memory, which, after stronger judgments, might dispense some advantage. Sidney.

3. Addition of strength. Not much used.

To strengthen the infected parts, give some few advices by way of fortification and antidote. Government of the Tongue.

FO'RTIFIER. n. s. [from fortify.]

1. One who erects works for defence.

The fortifier of Pendeunis made his advantage of the commodity afforded by the ground. Carew.

2. One who supports or secures; one who upholds.

He was led forth by many armed men, who often had been the fortifiers of wickedness, to the place of execution. Sidney.

To FO'RTIFY. v. a. [fortifier, Fr.]

1. To strengthen against attacks by walls or works.

Great Dunsinane he strongly fortifies. Shakesp.
He fortified the city against besieging. Eccl. l. 4.

2. To confirm; to encourage.

It greatly fortified her desires, to see that her mother had the like desires. Sidney.
To fortify the former opinions Tostatus adds, that those which dwell near the falls of water are deaf from their infancy; but this I hold as feigned. Raleigh.

3. To fix; to establish in resolution.

But in-born worth that fortune can controul,
New-strung and stiffer bent her softer soul:
The heroine assum'd the woman's place,
Confirm'd her mind, and fortify'd her face. Dryd.
A young man, before he leaves the shelter of his father's house, should be fortified with resolution to secure his virtues. Locke.

To FO'RTIFY. v. n. To raise strong places.

Thou us impower'd
To fortify thus far and overlay
With this portentous bridge the dark abyss. Milt.

FO'RTILAGE. n. s. [from fort.] A little fort; a blockhouse.

Yet was the fence thereof but weak and thin,
Nought fear'd their force that fortilage to win. Spenser.
In all straights and narrow passages there should be some little fortilage, or wooden castle set, which should keep and command the straight. Spenser.

FO'RTIN. n. s. [Fr.] A little fort raised to defend a camp, particularly in a siege. Hanmer.

Thou hast talk'd
Of palisadoes, fortins, parapets. Shakesp.

FO'RTITUDE. n. s. [fortitudo, Lat.]

1. Courage; bravery; magnanimity; greatness of mind; power of acting or suffering well.

The king-becoming graces,
Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude,
I have no relish of them. Shakesp. Macbeth.
The better fortitude
Of patience, and heroick martyrdom
Unsung. Milton's Par. Lost.
Fortitude is the guard and support of the other virtues; and without courage, a man will scarce keep steady to his duty, and fill up the character of a truly worthy man. Locke.
They thought it reasonable to do all possible honour to the memories of martyrs; partly that others might be encouraged to the same patience and fortitude, and partly that virtue, even in this world, might not lose its reward. Nelson.

2. Strength; force. Not in use.

He wrongs his fame,
Despairing of his own arm's fortitude,
To join with witches and the help of hell. Shakesp.

FO'RTLET. n. s. [from fort.] A little fort.

FO'RTNIGHT. n. s. [contracted from fourteen nights, peonmeyne nighr, Sax. It was the custom of the ancient northern nations to count time by nights: thus we say, this day seven-night. So Tacitus, Non dierum numerum, ut nos, sed noctium computant.] The space of two weeks.

She would give her a lesson for walking so late, that should make her keep within doors for one fortnight. Sidney.
Hanging on a deep well, somewhat above the water, for some fortnights space, is an excellent means of making drink fresh and quick. Bacon
About a fortnight before I had finished it, his majesty's declaration for liberty of conscience came abroad. Dryden.
He often had it in his head, but never, with much apprehension, 'till about a fortnight before. Swift.

FO'RTRESS. n. s. [fortresse, Fr.] A strong hold; a fortified place; a castle of defence.

Breaking forth like a sudden tempest, he overran all, breaking down all the holds and fortresses. Spenser on Ireland.
The trump of death sounds in their hearing shrill;
Their weapon, faith; their fortress was the grave. Fairfax.
God is our fortress, in whose conqu'ring name
Let us resolve to scale their flinty bulwarks. Shak
There is no such way to give defence to absurd doctrines, as to guard them round about with legions of obscure and undefined words; which yet makes these retreats more like the dens of robbers, or holes of foxes, than the fortresses of fair warriors. Locke.

FORTU'ITOUS. adj. [fortuit, Fr. fortuitus, Lat.] Accidental; casual; happening by chance.

A wonder it must be, that there should be any man found so stupid as to persuade himself that this most beautiful world could be produced by the fortuitous concourse of atoms. Ray.
If casual concourse did the world compose,
And things and acts fortuitous arose,
Then any thing might come from any thing,
For how from chance can constant order spring. Blackmore.

FORTU'ITOUSLY. adv. [from fortuitous.] Accidentally; casually; by chance.

It is partly evaporated into air, and partly diluted into water, and fortuitously shared between all the elements. Rogers.

FORTU'ITOUSNESS. n. s. [from fortuitous.] Accident; chance; hit.

FO'RTUNATE. adj. [fortunatus, Lat.] Lucky; happy; successful; not subject to miscarriage. Used of persons or actions.

I am most fortunate thus accidentally to encounter you: you have ended my business, and I will merrily accompany you home. Shak. Coriol.
He sigh'd; and could not but their fate deplore,
So wretched now, so fortunate before. Dryden.
No, there is a necessity in fate
Why sometime brave bold man is fortunate:
He keeps his object ever full in sight,
And that assurance holds him firm and right:
True, 'tis a narrow path that leads to bliss,
But right before those is no precipice;
Fear makes them look aside, and so their footing miss. Dryden.

FO'RTUNATELY. adv. [from fortunate.] Happily; successfully.

Bright Eliza rul'd Britannia's state,
And boldly wise, and fortunately great. Prior.

FO'RTUNATENESS. n. s. [from fortunate.] Happiness; good luck; success.

O me, said she, whose greatest fortunateness is more unfortunate than my sister's greatest unfortunateness. Sidney.

FO'RTUNE. n. s. [fortuna, Lat. fortune, Fr.]

1. The power supposed to distribute the lots of life according to her own humour.

Fortune, that arrant whore,
Ne'er turns the key to th' poor. Shak. King Lear.
Though fortune's malice overthrow my state,
My mind exceeds the compass of her wheel. Shak.

2. The good or ill that befals man.

Rejoice, said he, to-day;
In you the fortune of Great Britain lies:
Among so brave a people you are they
Whom heav'n has chose to fight for such a prize. Dryden.
The adequate meaning of chance, as distinguished from fortune, in that the latter is understood to befal only rational agents, but chance to be among inanimate bodies. Bentley.

3. The chance of life; means of living.

His father dying, he was driven to London to seek his fortune. Swift.

4. Success, good or bad; event.

This terrestrial globe has been surrounded by the fortune and boldness of many navigators. Temple.
No, he shall eat, and die with me, or live;
Our equal crimes shall equal fortune give, Dry.

5. Estate; possessions.

If thou do'st,
And this instructs thee, thou do'st make thy way
To noble fortunes. Shakesp. King Lear
That eyeless head of thine was first fram'd flesh
To raise my fortunes. Shakesp. King Lear.
But tell me, Tityrus, what heav'nly power
Preserv'd your fortunes in that fatal hour? Dryd.
The fate which governs poets thought fit
He should not raise his fortunes by his wit. Dryd.
He was younger son to a gentleman of a good birth, but small fortune. Swift.

6. The portion of a man or woman: generally of a woman.

I am thought some heiress rich in lands,
Fled to escape a cruel guardian's hands;
Which may produce a story worth the telling,
Of the next sparks that go a fortune stealing.
Prologue to Orphan.
The fortune hunters have already cast their eyes upon her, and take care to plant themselves in her view. Spectator.
When miss delights in her spinnet,
A fidler may a fortune get. Swift.

7. Futurity; future events.

You who mens fortunes in their faces read,
To find out mine, look not, alas, on me:
But mark her face, and all the features heed;
For only there is writ my destiny. Cowley's Mist.

To FO'RTUNE. v. n. [from the noun.] To befal; to fall out; to happen; to come casually to pass.

It fortuned, as fair it then befel
Behind his back, unweeting, where he stood,
Of ancient time there was a springing well,
From which fast trickled forth a silver flood.
Fairy Queen.
It fortuned the same night that a Christian, serving a Turk in the camp, secretly gave the watchmen warning. Knolles.
I'll tell you as we pass along,
That you will wonder what hath fortuned. Shak.
Here fortun'd Curl to slide. Pope's Dunciad.

FO'RTUNED. adj. Supplied by fortune.

Not th' imperious shew
Of the full fortun'd Cæsar ever shall
Be brook'd with me. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleop.

FO'RTUNEBOOK. n. s. [fortune and book.] A book consulted to know fortune or future events.

Thou know'st a face, in whose each look
Beauty lays ope love's fortunebook;

On whose fair revolutions wait
The obsequious motions of love's fate. Crashaw.

FORTUNEHU'NTER. n. s. [fortune and hunt.] A man whose employment is to enquire after women with great portions, to enrich himself by marrying them.

We must, however, distinguish between fortune-hunters and fortunestealers. Spectator.

To* FO'RTUNETELL. v. n. [fortune and tell.]

1. To pretend to the power of revealing futurity.

We are simple men; we do not know what's brought to pass under the profession of fortunetelling. Shakesp.

I'll conjure you, I'll fortunetell you. Shakesp.

The gypsies were to divide the money got by stealing linen, or by fortunetelling. Walton's Angler.

2. To reveal futurity.

Here, while his canting drone-pipe scan'd
The mystick figures of her hand,
He tipples palmestry, and dines
On all her fortunetelling lines. Cleaveland.

FO'RTUNETELLER. n. s. [fortune and teller.] One who cheats common people, by pretending to the knowledge of futurity.

They brought one Pinel, a hungry lean-fac'd villain,
A t' read-bare juggler, and a fortuneteller. Shakesp.

A Welchman being at a sessions-house, and seeing the prisoners hold up their hands at the bar, related to some of his acquaintance that the judges were good fortunetellers; for if they did but look upon their hand, they could certainly tell whether they should live or die. Bacon's Apophthegms.

Hast thou given credit to vain predictions of men, to dreams or fortunetellers, or gone about to know any secret things by lot? Duppa's Rules for Devotion.

There needs no more than impudence on one side, and a superstitious credulity on the other, to the setting up of a fortuneteller. L'Estrange.

Long ago a fortuneteller
Exactly said what now befell her. Swift

FO'RTY. adj. [ꝑeopertiȝ, Sax.] Four times ten.

FRA'GRANCY. } Sweetness of smell; pleasing scent; grateful odour.

Eve separate he spies,
Veil'd in a cloud of fragrance, where she stood
Half spy'd. Milton's Par. Lost.

I am more pleas'd to survey my rows of coleworts and cabbages springing up in their full fragrancy and verdure, than to see the tender plants of foreign countries kept alive by artificial heats. Addison's Spectator.

Not lovelier seem'd Narcissus to the eye;
Nor, when a flower, could boast more fragrancy. Garth.

Such was the wine; to quench whose fervent steam
Scarce twenty measures from the living stream
To cool one cup suffic'd: the goblet crown'd,
Breath'd aromatick fragrancies around. Pope's Ody.

FRA'GRANT. adj. [fragrans, Lat.] Odorous; sweet of smell.

Fragrant the fertile earth
After soft show'rs; and sweet the coming on
Of grateful evening mild. Milton.

The nymph vouchsaf'd to place
Upon her head the various wreath:
The flow'rs, less blooming than her face;
Their scent less fragrant than her breath. Prior.

FRA'GRANTLY. adv. [from fragrant.] With sweet scent.

As the hops begin to change colour, and smell fragrantly, you may conclude them ripe. Mortimer.

As force, without fevers within can kill. Davies.

When with care we have raised an imaginary treasure of happiness, we find, at last, that the materials of the structure are frail and perishing, and the foundation itself is laid in the sand. Rogers.

2. Weak of resolution; liable to errour or seduction.

The truly virtuous do not easily credit evil that is told them of their neighbours; for if others may do amiss, then may these also speak amiss: man is frail, and prone to evil, and therefore may soon fail in words. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

FRA'ILNESS. n. s. [from frail.] Weakness; instability.

There is nothing among all the frailnesses and uncertainties of this sublunary world so tottering and unstable as the virtue of a coward. Norris.

FRA'ILTY. n. s. [from frail.]

1. Weakness of resolution; instability of mind; infirmity.

Though Page be a secure fool, and stands so firmly on his wife's frailty, yet I cannot put off my opinion so easily. Shakesp.

Nor should'st thou have trusted that to woman's frailty:
Ere I to thee, thou to thyself was cruel. Milton.

God knows our frailty, pities our weakness, and requires of us no more than we are able to do. Locke.

2. Fault proceeding from weakness; sins of infirmity: in this sense it has a plural.

Love did his reason blind,
And love's the noblest frailty of the mind. Dryden.

Kind wits will those light faults excuse;
Those are the common frailties of the muse. Dryden.

Death, only death, can break the lasting chain;
And here, ev'n then, shall my cold dust remain;
Here all its frailties, all its flames resign,
And wait, 'till 'tis no sin to mix with thine.. Pope.

That Christians are now not only like other men in their frailties and infirmities, might be in some degree excusable; but the complaint is, they are like heathens in all the main and chief articles of their lives. Law.

FRANKPLE'DGE. n. s. [franciplegium, Lat. of franc, i. e. liber & pleige, i. e. fidei jussor.] A pledge or surety for freemen. For the ancient custom of England, for the preservation of the public peace, was that every freeborn man at fourteen years of age, religious persons, clerks, knights, and their eldest sons excepted, should find security for his fidelity to the king, or else be kept in prison: whence it became customary for a certain number of neighbours to be bound for one another, to see each man of their pledge forthcoming at all times, or to answer the transgression of any one absenting himself. This was called frankpledge, and the circuit thereof was called decenna, because it commonly consisted of ten households; and every particular person, thus mutually bound, was called decennier. This custom was so strictly observed, that the sheriffs in every county, did from time to time take the oaths of young ones as they grew to the age of fourteen years, and see that they combined in one dozen or other: this branch of the sheriff's authority was called visus franciplegii, view of frankpledge. Cowel.

FRA'NTICK. adj. [corrupted from phrenetick, phrenticus, Lat. φρενητικὸς.]

1. Mad; deprived of understanding by violent madness; outrageously and turbulently mad.

Far off, he wonders what makes them so glad;
Of Bacchus' merry fruit they did invent,
Or Cybel's frantick rites have made them mad. Fairy Queen.

2. Transported by violence of passion; outrageous; turbulent.

Esteeming, in the frantick error of their minds, the greatest madness in the world to be wisdom, and the highest wisdom foolishness. Hooker.

To such height their frantick passion grows,
That what both love, both hazard to destroy. Dryd.

She tears her hair, and, frantick in her griefs,
Calls out Lucia. Addison's Cato.

When Christian swords with Persian blood were dy'd,
The furious prince Tancredie from that fray
His coward foes chased through forests wide. Fairf.

After the bloody fray at Wakefield fought.
Shakesp. Henry VI.

He left them to the fates in bloody fray,
To toil and struggle through the well-fought day.
Pope

2. A duel; a combat.

Since, if we fall before th' appointed day,
Nature and death continue long their fray. Denh.

The boaster Paris oft desir'd the day
With Sparta's king to meet in single fray. Pope.

3. A broil; a quarrel; a riot of violence.

I'll speak between the change of man and boy
With a reed voice, and turn two mincing steps
Into a manly stride; and speak of frays,
Like a fine bragging youth. Shakesp.

To FRAY. v. a. [effrayer, Fr.]

1. To fright; to terrify.

The panther, knowing that his spotted hide
Doth please all beasts, but that his looks them fray,
Within a bush his dreadful head doth hide,
To let them gaze, while he on them may prey.
Spenser.

So diversely themselves in vain they fray,
Whilst some more bold to measures him stand nigh.
Spenser.

Fishes are thought to be frayed with the motion caused by noise upon the water. Bacon.

These vultures prey only on carcases, on such stupid minds as have not life and vigour to fray them away. Gov. of Ton.

FRE'CKLE. n. s. [flecke a spot, Ger. whence fleckle, freckle.]

1. A spot raised in the skin by the sun.

Ruddy his lips, and fresh and fair his hue;
Some sprinkled freckles on his face were seen,
Whose dusk set off the whiteness of the skin. Dryd.

2. Any small spot or discoloration.

The cowslips tall her pensioners be;
In their gold coats spots you see:
Those be rubies fairy favours;
In those freckles live their favours. Shakesp.

The farewel frosts and easterly winds now spot your tulips; therefore cover such with mats, to prevent freckles. Evelyn.

FRE'CKLED. adj. [from freckle.] Spotted; maculated; discoloured with small spots.

Sometimes we'll angle at the brook,
The freckled trout to take
With silken worms. Drayton's Cynthia.

The even mead that erst brought sweetly forth
The freckled cowslip,
Wanting the scythe, all uncorrected, rank,
Conceives by idleness. Shakesp. Henry V.

Now thy face charms ev'ry shepherd,
Spotted over like a leopard;
And, thy freckled neck display'd,
Envy breeds in ev'ry maid. Swift.

FRE'CKLY. adj. [from freckle] Full of freckles.

FRED. The same with peace; upon which our forefathers called their sanctuaries fredstole, i. e. the seats of peace. So Frederic is powerful or wealthy in peace; Winfred, victorious peace; Reinfred, sincere peace. Gibson's Camden.

FREE. adj. [fpeah, Sax. vry, Dut.]

1. At liberty; not a vassal; not enslaved; not a prisoner; not dependant.

A free nation is that which has never been conquered, or thereby entered into any condition of subjection. Temple.

Free! what, and fetter'd with so many chains?
Dryden.

How can we think any one freer than to have the power to do what he will? Locke.

This wretched body trembles at your pow'r:
Thus far could fortune; but she can no more:
Free to herself my potent mind remains,
Nor fears the victor's rage, nor feels his chains.
Prior.

Set an unhappy pris'ner free,
Who ne'er intended harm to thee. Prior.

2. Uncompelled; unrestrained.

Their use of meats was not like unto our ceremonies, that being a matter of private action in common life, where every man was free to order that which himself did; but this is a publick constitution for the ordering of the church. Hooker.

Do faithful homage, and receive free honours,
All which we pine for now. Shakesp. Macbeth

It was free, and in my choice whether or no I should publish these discourses; yet the publication being once resolved, the dedication was not indifferent. South

3. Not bound by fate; not necessitated.

Freely they stood who stood, and fell who fell.
Not free, what proof could they have given sincere
Of true allegiance, constant faith [illegible]'d;
Not what they would? [illegible] Par. Lost.

4. Permitted; allowed.

Why [illegible] are not the streets as free
For [illegible] as for you? Shakesp. Taming of the Shrew

[illegible]aining as impure what God declares [illegible]ure; and commands to some, leaves free to all. Milton.

To gloomy cares my thoughts alone are free,
Ill the gay sports with troubled thoughts agree.
Pope.

5. Licentious; unrestrained.

O conspiracy!
Sham'st thou to shew thy dang'rous brow by night
When evils are most free? Shakesp.

Physicians are too free upon the subject, in the conversation of their friends. Temple

The criticks have been very free in their censures. Felton.

I know there are to whose presumptuous thoughts
Those freer beauties, ev'n in them, seem faults.
Pope.

6. Open; ingenuous; frank.

Castalio, I have doubts within my heart;
Will you be free and candid to your friend? Otway.

7. Acquainted; conversing without reserve.

'Tis not to make me jealous;
To say my wife is fair, feeds well, loves company,
Is free of speech, sings, plays, and dances well,
Where virtue is, these make more virtuous. Shak.

Being one day very free at a great feast, he suddenly broke forth into a great laughter. Hakewill.

Free and familiar with misfortune grow,
Be us'd to sorrow, and inur'd to woe. Prior.

8. Liberal; not parsimonious: with of.

Glo'ster too, a foe to citizens,
O'erchanging your free purses with large fines,
That seeks to overthrow religion. Shakesp.

No statute in his favour says,
How free or frugal I shall pass my days;
I, who at sometimes spend as others spare. Pope

Alexandrian verses, of twelve syllables, should never be allowed but when some remarkable beauty or propriety in them atones for the liberty: Mr. Dryden has been too free of these in his latter works. Pope.

9. Frank; not gained by importunity; not purchased.

We wanted words to express our thanks: his noble free offers left us nothing to ask. Bacon.

10. Clear from distress.

Who alone suffers, suffers most i' th' mind,
Leaving free things and happy shows behind. Shakesp.

11. Guiltless; innocent.

Make mad the guilty, and appall the free,
Confound the ignorant. Shakesp. Hamlet.

My hands are guilty, but my heart is free. Dryd

2. Exempt; with of anciently; more properly from.

These
Are such allow'd infirmities, that honesty
Is never free of. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

Who fears not to do ill, yet fears the name;
And free from conscience, is a slave to fame. Denh.

Let envy, then, those crimes within you see,
From which the happy never must be free. Dryden.

Their steeds around,
Free from the harness, graze the flow'ry ground. Dryden.

The will, free from the determination of such desires, is left to the pursuit of nearer satisfactions. Locke.

13. Invested with franchises; possessing any thing without vassalage; admitted to the privileges of any body: with of.

He therefore makes all birds of every sect
Free of his farm, with promise to respect
Their several kinds alike, and equally protect. Dryden.

What do'st thou make a shipboard? To what end
Art thou of Bethlem's noble college free?
Stark-staring mad, that thou should'st tempt the sea? Dryden.

14. Without expence; by charity, as a free school.

To* FREE. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To set at liberty; to rescue from slavery or captivity; to manumit; to release.

The child was prisoner to the womb, and is
By law and process of great nature thence Free'd and enfranchis'd; not a party to
The anger of the king, nor guilty of,
If any be, the trespass of the queen. Shakesp.

He recovered the temple, free'd the city, and upheld the laws which were going down. 2 Mac. ii. 22.

Can'st thou no other master understand,
Than him that free'd thee by the prætor's wand? Dryden.

Should thy coward tongue
Spread its cold poison through the martial throng,
My jav'lin shall revenge so base a part,
And free the soul that quivers in thy heart. Pope.

2. To rid from; to clear from any thing ill: with of or from.

It is no marvail, that he could think of no better way to be free'd of these inconveniences the passions of those meetings gave him, than to dissolve them. Clarendon.

Hercules
Free'd Erymanthus from the foaming boar. Dryd.

Our land is from the rage of tygers free'd. Dryd.

3. To clear from impediments or obstructions.

The chaste Sibylla shall your steps convey,
And blood of offer'd victims free the way. Dryden

Fierce was the fight; but hast'ning to his prey,
By force the furious lover free'd his way. Dryden.

This master-key
Frees every lock, and leads us to his person. Dryden.

4. To banish; to send away; to rid. Not in use.

We may again
Give to our tables meat, sleep to our nights,
Free from our feasts and banquets bloody knives. Shakesp.

Never any Sabbath of release
Could free his travels and afflictions deep. Daniel

5. To exempt.

For he that is dead is free'd from sin. Rom. vi. 7.

FREEBO'OTER. n. s. [free and booty.] A robber; a plunderer; a pillager.

Perkin was not followed by any English of name, his forces consisted mostly of base people and freebooters, fitter to spoil a coast than to recover a kingdom. Bacon.

The earl of Warwick had, as often as he met with any Irish frigates, or such freebooters as sailed under their commission, taken all the seamen. Clarendon.

FREEBO'OTING. n. s. Robbery; plunder; the act of pillaging.

Under it he may cleanly convey any fit pillage, that cometh handsomely in his way; and when he goeth abroad in the night on freebooting, it is his best and surest friend. Spenser.

FRE'EBORN. n. s. [free and born.] Not a slave; inheriting liberty.

O baseness, to support a tyrant's throne,
And crush your freeborn brethren of the world! Dryden.

I shall speak my thoughts like a freeborn subject, such things perhaps as no Dutch commentator could, and I am sure no Frenchman durst. Dryd.

Shall freeborn men, in humble awe,
Submit to servile shame;
Who from consent and custom draw
The same right to be rul'd by law,
Which kings pretend to reign? Dryden.

FREECHA'PPEL. n. s. [free and chappel.] Such chappels as are of the king's foundations, and by him exempted from the jurisdiction of the ordinary. The king may also license a subject to found such a chappel, and by his charter exempt it from the ordinary's visitation. Cowel.

FRE'ECOST. n. s. [free and cost.] Without expence; free from charges.

We must not vouch any man for an exact master in the rules of our modern policy, but such a one as has brought himself so far to hate and despise the absurdity of being kind upon freecost, as not so much as to tell a friend what it is o'clock for nothing. South.

FRE'EDMAN. n. s. [freed and man.] A slave manumitted. Libertus.

The freedman jostles, and will be preferr'd;
First come, first serv'd, he cries. Dryden's Juv.

FRE'EDOM. n. s. [from free.]

1. Liberty; exemption from servitude; independence.

The laws themselves they do specially rage at, as most repugnant to their liberty and natural freedom. Spenser on Ireland.

O freedom! first delight of human kind!
Not that which bondmen from their masters find,
The privilege of doles; nor yet t' inscribe
Their names in this or t' other Roman tribe:
That false enfranchisement with ease is found;
Slaves are made citizens by turning round. Dryd

2. Privileges; franchises; immunities.

By our holy Sabbath have I sworn
To have the due and forfeit of my bond:
If you deny it, let the danger light
Upon your charter, and your city's freedom. Shak.

3. Power of enjoying franchises.

This prince first gave freedom to servants, so as to become citizens of equal privileges with the rest, which very much increased the power of the people. Swift.

4. Exemption from fate, necessity, or predetermination.

I else must change
Their nature, and revoke the high decree
Unchangeable, eternal, which ordain'd
Their freedom; they themselves ordain'd their fall. Milton.

In every sin, by how much the more free will is in its choice, by so much is the act the more sinful; and where there is nothing to importune, urge, or provoke the will to any act, there is so much an higher and perfecter degree of freedom about that act. South.

5. Unrestraint.

I will that all the feasts and sabbaths shall be all days of immunity and freedom for the Jews in my realm. 1 Mac. x.

6. The state of being without any particular evil or inconvenience.

The freedom of their state lays them under a great necessity of always chusing and doing the best things. Law.

7. Ease or facility in doing or showing any thing.

FREEFO'OTED. adj. [free and foot.] Not restrained in the march.

We will fetters put upon this fear,
Which now goes too freefooted. Shakesp. Hamlet.

FREEHE'ARTED. adj. [free and heart.] Liberal; unrestrained.

Love must freehearted be, and voluntary;
And not inchanted, or by fate constrain'd. Davies.

FREEHO'LD. n. s. [free and hold.] That land or tenement which a man holdeth in fee, fee-tail, or for term of life. Freehold in deed is the real possession of lands or tenements in fee, fee-tail, or for life. Freehold in law is the right that a man has to such land or tenements before his entry or seizure. Freehold is sometimes taken in opposition to villenage. Land, in the time of the Saxons, was called either bockland, that is, holden by book or writing, or foreland, that is, holden, without writing. The former was held by far better conditions, and by the better sort of tenants, as noblemen and gentlemen, being such as we now call freehold. The latter was commonly in the possession of clowns, being that which we now call at the will of the lord. Cowel.

No alienation of lands holden in chief should be available, touching the freehold or inheritance thereof, but only where it were made by matter of record. Bacon's Office of Alienation.

There is an unspeakable pleasure in calling any thing one's own: a freehold, though it be but in ice and snow, will make the owner pleased in the possession, and stout in the defence of it. Addison.

My friends here are very few, and fixed to the freehold, from whence nothing but death will remove them. Swift.

I should be glad to possess a freehold that could not be taken from me by any law to which I did not give consent. Swift.

FREEHOLDER. n. s. [from freehold.] One who has a freehold.

As extortion did banish the old English freeholder, who could not live but under the law; so the law did banish the Irish lord, who could not live but by extortion. Davies.

FREE'LY. adv. [from free.]

1. At liberty; without vassalage; without slavery; without dependance.
2. Without restraint; heartily; with full gust.

If my son were my husband, I would freelier rejoice in that absence wherein he won honour, than in the embracements of his bed, where he would shew most love. Shakesp Coriolanus.

3. Plentifully; lavishly.

I pledge your grace; and if you knew what pains I have bestow'd to breed this present peace, You would drink freely. Shakesp. Hen. IV.

4. Without scruple; without reserve.

Let such teach others whom themselves excel, And censure freely who have written well. Pope.

5. Without impediment.

To follow rather the Goths in rhyming than the Greeks in true versifying, were even to eat acorns with swine, when we may freely eat wheat-bread among men. Ascham.

The path to peace is virtue: what I show, Thyself may freely on thyself bestow; Fortune was never worshipp'd by the wise; But set aloft by fools, usurps the skies. Dryden.

6. Without necessity; without predetermination.

Freely they stood who stood, and fell who fell. Milton.

He leaves us to chuse with the liberty of reasonable beings: they who comply with his grace, comply with it freely; and they who reject it, do also freely reject it. Rogers.

7. Frankly; liberally; without cost.

By nature all things have an equally common use: nature freely and indifferently opens the bosoms of the universe to all mankind. South.

8. Spontaneously; of its own accord.

FRE'EMAN. n. s. [free and man.]

1. One not a slave; not a vassal.

Had you rather Cæsar were living, and die all slaves, than that Cæsar were dead, to live all freemen? Shakesp.

If to break loose from the conduct of reason, and to want that restraint of examination and judgment which keeps us from chusing or doing the worst, be liberty, true liberty, madmen and fools are only the freemen. Locke.

2. One partaking of rights, privileges, or immunities.

He made us freemen of the continent, What nature did like captives treat before. Dryd.

What this union was is expressed in the preceding verse, by their both having been made freemen on the same day. Addison.

FREEMI'NDED. adj. [free and mind.] Unperplexed; without load of care.

To be freeminded, and cheerfully disposed at hours of meat, sleep, and exercise, is one of the best precepts of long lasting. Bacon.

FRE'ENESS. n. s. [from free.]

1. The state or quality of being free.
2. Oppenness; unreservedness; ingenousness; candour.

The reader may pardon it, if he please, for the freeness of the confession. Dryden.

3. Generosity; liberality.

I hope it will never be said that the laity, who by the clergy are taught to be charitable, shall in their corporations exceed the clergy itself, and their sons, in freeness of giving. Spratt.

FREESCHO'OL. n. s. [free and school.] A school in which learning is given without pay.

To give a civil education to the youth of this land in the time to come, provision was made by another law, that there should be one freeschool at least erected in every diocese. Davies.

Two Clergymen stood candidates for a small freeschool; a gentleman who happened to have a better understanding than his neighbours, procured the place for him who was the better scholar. Swift.

FREESPO'KEN. adj. [free and spoken.] Accustomed to speak without reserve.

Nerva one night supped privately with some six or seven; amongst whom there was one that was a dangerous man, and began to take the like courses as Marcellas and Regulus had done: the emperor fell into discourse of the injustice and tyranny of the former time, and, by name, of the two accusers; and said, what should we do with them, if we had them now? One of them that was at supper, and was a freespoken senator, said Marry, they should sup with us. Bacon.

FRE'ESTONE. n. s. [free and stone.] Stone commonly used in building.

Freestone is so named from its being of such a constitution as to be wrought and cut freely in any direction. Woodward.

I saw her hand; she has a leathern hand, a freestone-coloured hand. Shakesp. As you like it

The streets are generally paved with brick or freestone, and always kept very neat. Add. on Italy.

FREETHI'NKER. n. s. [free and think.] A libertine; a contemner of religion.

Atheist is an old-fashioned word; I'm a freethinker, child. Addison.

Of what use is freedom of thought, if it will not produce freedom of action, which is the sole end, how remote soever in appearance, of all objections against Christianity? And therefore the freethinkers consider it as an edifice, wherein all the parts have such a mutual dependance on each other, that if you pull out one single nail, the whole fabrick must fall to the ground. Swift.

FREEWI'LL. n. s. [free and will.]

1. The power of directing our own actions without restraint by necessity or fate.

We have a power to suspend the prosecution of this or that desire; this seems to me the source of all liberty; in this seems to consist that which is improperly called freewill. Locke.

2. Voluntariness; spontaneity.

I make a decree, that all they of the people of Israel in my realm, which are minded of their own freewill to go up to Jerusalem, go with thee. Ezra vii. 13.

And draw thy water from the freshest spring. Prior.

2. Not salt.

They keep themselves unmixt with the salt water, so that, a very great way within the sea, men may take up as fresh water as if they were near the land. Abbot's Desc. of the World.

3. New; not had before.

No borrowed bays his temples did adorn,
But to our crown he did fresh jewels bring. Dryd.

4. New; not impaired by time.

This second source of men, while yet but few,
And while the dread of judgment past remain
Fresh in their minds, fearing the Deity,
With some regard to what is just and right,
Shall lead their lives. Milton's Paradise Lost.

That love which first was set, will first decay;
Mine of a fresher date will longer stay. Dryden.

5. In a state like that of recentness.

We will revive those times, and in our memories
Preserve and still keep fresh, like flowers in waters. Denham.

With such a care
As roses from their stalks we tear,
When we would still preserve them new,
And fresh as on the bush they grew. Waller.

Thou sun, said I, fair light!
And thou enlighten'd earth, so fresh and gay! Milt.

Think not, 'cause men flatt'ring say,
Y'are fresh as April, sweet as May,
Bright as is the morning star,
That you are so. Carew.

6. Recent; newly come.

Amidst the spirits Palinurus press'd;
Yet fresh from life, a new admitted guest. Dryden.

Fresh from the fact, as in the present case,
The criminals are seiz'd upon the place,
Stiff in denial, as the law appoints,
On Engines they distend their tortur'd joints. Dryd.

7. Repaired from any loss or diminution.

Nor lies she long; but as her fates ordain,
Springs up to life, and fresh to second pain;
Is sav'd to-day, to-morrow to be slain. Dryden.

8. Florid; vigorous; cheerful; unfaded; unimpaired.

This pope is decrepid, and the bell goeth for him, take order that when he is dead there be chosen a pope of fresh years, between fifty and threescore. Bacon's Holy War.

2. Freedom from diminution by time; not staleness.

For the constant freshness of it, it is such a pleasure as can never cloy or overwork the mind; for surely no man was ever weary of thinking, that he had done well or virtuously. South.

3. Freedom from fatigue; newness of strength.

The Scots had the advantage both for number and freshness of men. Hayward.

4. Coolness.

There are some rooms in Italy and Spain for freshness, and gathering the winds and air in the heats of Summer; but they be but pennings of the winds, and enlarging them again, and making them reverberate in circles. Bacon.

Say, if she please, she hither may repair,
And breathe the freshness of the open air. Dryd.

She laid her down to rest,
And to the winds expos'd her glowing breast,
To take the freshness of the morning air. Addison.

5. Ruddiness; colour of health.

The secret venom, circling in her veins,
Works through her skin, and bursts in bloating stains;
Her cheeks their freshness lose and wonted grace,
And an unusual paleness spreads her face. Crawe.

6. Freedom from saltness.

FRESH'WATER. [A compound word of fresh and water, used as an adjective.] Raw; unskilled; unacquainted. A low term borrowed from the sailors, who stigmatise those who come first to sea as freshwater men, or novices.

Those nobility, as freshwater soldiers which had never seen but some light skirmishes, in their vain bravery made light account of the Turks. Knolles.

FRET. n. s. [Of this word the etymology is very doubtful: some derive it from φρεαν to eat; others from φρεαρ to adorn; some from φρίττω; Skinner more probably from fremo, or the French fretiller: perhaps it comes immediately from the Lat. fretum.]

1. A frith, or strait of the sea, where the water by confinement is always rough.

Euripus generally signifieth any strait, fret, or channel of the sea, running between two shores. Brown.

2. Any agitation of liquors by fermentation, confinement, or other cause.

Of this river the surface is covered with froth and bubbles; for it runs along upon the fret, and is still breaking against the stones that oppose its passage. Addison on Italy.

The blood in a fever, if well governed, like wine upon the fret, dischargeth itself of heterogeneous mixtures. Derham.

3. That stop of the musical instrument which causes or regulates the vibrations of the string.

It requireth good winding of a string before it will make any note; and, in the tops of lutes, the higher they go, the less distance is between the frets. Bacon.

The harp
Had work, and rested not: the solemn pipe
And dulcimer, all organs of sweet stop,
All sounds on fret by string or golden wire,
Temper'd soft tunings, intermix'd with voice
Choral or unison. Milton's Paradise Lost.

They are fitted to answer the most variable harmony: two or three pipes to all those of a church-organ, or to all the strings and frets of a lute. Grew's Cosmol. Sac.

4. Work rising in protuberances.

The frets of houses, and all equal figures, please; whereas unequal figures are but deformities. Bacon.

To FRIGHT. v. a. [fyrhtan, Sax.] To terrify; to disturb with fear; to shock with fear; to daunt; to dismay. This was in the old authors more frequently written affright, as it is always found in the Scripture.

The herds
Were strongly clam'rous in the frighted fields. Shakesp. Henry IV.

Such a numerous host
Fled not in silence through the frighted deep,
With ruin upon ruin, rout on routs
Confusion was confounded. Milton.

Cherubic watch, and of a sword the flame
Wide-waving, all approach far off to fright,
And guard all passage to the tree of life. Milton.

Nor exile or danger can fright a brave spirit,
With innocence guarded,
With virtue rewarded,
I make of my sufferings a merit. Dryden's Alb.

The mind frights itself with any thing reflected on in gross, and at a distance: things thus offered to the mind, carry the shew of nothing but difficulty. Locke.

Whence glaring oft with many a broaden'd orb,
He frights the nations. Thomson's Autumn.

FRIGHT. n. s. [from the verb.] A sudden terrour.

You, if your goodness does not plead my cause,
May think I broke all hospitable laws,
To bear you from your palace-yard by might,
And put your noble person in a fright. Dryden.

To FRI'GHTEN. v. a. To terrify; to shock with dread.

The rugged bear's, or spotted lynx's brood,
Frighten the valleys and infest the wood. Prior.

FRI'GHTFUL. adj. [from fright.]

1. Terrible; dreadful; full of terrour.
Tetchy and wayward was thy infancy,
Thy school days frightful, desp'rate, wild, and furious. Shakesp.

Lurana is a frippery of bankrupts, who fly thither from Druina to play their after-game. Howel.

2. Old cloaths; cast dresses; tattered rags.
Poor poet ape, that would be thought our chief,
Whose works are ev'n the frippery of wit;
From brocage is become so bold a thief,
As we, the robb'd, leave rage, and pity it. B. Jon.
The fighting-place now seamens rage supply,
And all the tackling is a frippery. Donne.
Ragfair is a place near the Tower of London, where old cloaths and frippery are sold. Pope.

To FRISK. v. n. [frizzare, Ital.]

1. To leap; to skip.
Put water into a glass, and wet your finger, and draw it round about the lip of the glass, pressing it somewhat hard; and after drawing it some few times about, it will make the water frisk and sprinkle up in a fine dew. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
The fish fell a frisking in the net. L'Estrange
Whether every one hath experimented this troublesome intrusion of some frisking ideas, which thus importune the understanding, and hinder it from being better employed, I know not. Locke.

2. To dance in frolick or gaiety.
We are as twin'd lambs, that did frisk i' th' sun,
And bleat the one at the other: what we chang'd,
Was innocence for innocence; we knew not
The doctrine of ill-doing. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.
About them frisking play'd
All beasts of th' earth. Milton's Paradise Lost.
A wanton heifer frisked up and down in a meadow, at ease and pleasure. L'Estrange.

Peg faints at the sound of an organ, and yet will dance and frisk at the noise of a bagpipe. Arbuth.
Sly hunters thus, in Borneo's isle,
To catch a monkey by a wile,
The mimick animal amuse;
They place before him gloves and shoes;
Which when the brute puts aukward on,
All his agility is gone:
In vain to frisk or climb he tries;
The huntsmen seize the grinning prize. Swift.

FRISK. n. s. [from the verb.] A frolick; a fit of wanton gaiety.

FRI'SKER. n. s. [from frisk.] A wanton; one not constant or settled.
Now I will wear this, and now I will wear that;
Now I will wear I cannot tell what:
All new fashions be pleasant to me:
Now I am a frisker, all men on me look;
What should I do but set cock on the hoop? Chaucer.

FRI'SKINESS. n. s. [from frisk.] Gaiety; liveliness. A low word.

From the presence of the sun,
Following darkness like a dream,
Now are frolick. Shakesp.
Whether, as some sages sing,
The frolick wind that breathes the Spring,
Zephyr with Aurora playing,
As he met her once a Maying;
There on beds of violets blue,
And fresh-blown roses wash'd in dew,
Fill'd her with thee a daughter fair,
So buxom, blithe, and debonnair. Milton.
Who ripe, and frolick of his full grown age,
Roving the Celtick and Iberian fields,
At last betakes him to this ominous wood. Milton.
The gay, the frolick, and the loud. Waller.

Then heav'n's imperious queen shot down from high. Dryden.

28. From thence. Here from is superfluous.
In the necessary differences which arise from thence, they rather break into several divisions than join in any one public interest; and from hence have always risen the most dangerous factions, which have ruined the peace of nations. Clarendon.

29. From whence. From is here superfluous.
While future realms his wand'ring thoughts de-
His daily vision, and his dream by night, [light,
Forbidden Thebes appears before his eye,
From whence he sees his absent brother fly. Pope.

30. From where.
From where high Ithaca o'erlooks the floods,
Brown with o'er-arching shades and pendent woods,
Us to these shores our filial duty draws. Pope's Od.

31. From without.
When the plantation grows to strength, then it is time to plant it with women as well as with men, that it may spread into generations, and not be pierced from without. Bacon.
If native power prevail not, shall I doubt
To seek for needful succour from without. Dryden.

32. From is sometimes followed by another preposition, with its proper case.

33. From amidst.
Thou too shalt fall by time or barb'rous foes,
Whose circling walls the sev'n fam'd hills enclose;
And thou, whose rival tow'rs invade the skies,
And from amidst the waves with equal glory rise.
Addison.

34. From among.
Here had new begun
My wand'ring, had not he, who was my guide
Up hither, from among the trees appear'd,
Presence divine! Milton's Paradise Lost.

35. From beneath.
My worthy wife our arms mislaid,
And from beneath my head my sword convey'd.
Dryden's Æn.

36. From beyond.
There followed him great multitudes of people from Galilee, and from beyond Jordan.
Mat. iv. 25.

37. From forth.
Young Aretus, from forth his bridal bow'r,
Brought the full laver o'er their hands to pour,
And canisters of consecrated flour. Pope's Odd.

38. From off.
The sea being constrained to withdraw from off certain tracts of lands, which lay till then at the bottom of it. Woodward.
Knights, unhors'd, may rise from off the plain,
And fight on foot, their honour to regain. Dryden.

39. From out.
The king with angry threatnings from out a window, where he was not ashamed the world should behold him a beholder, commanded his guard and the rest of his soldiers to hasten their death. Sidney.
And join thy voice unto the angel-quire,
From out his secret altar touch'd with hallow'd fire.
Milton.
Now shake, from out thy fruitful breast, the seeds
Of envy, discord, and of cruel deeds. Dryden's Æn.
Strong god of arms, whose iron sceptre sways
The freezing North and hyperborean seas,
Terror is thine and wild amazement, flung
From out thy chariot, withers ev'n the strong. Dryd.

40. From out of.
Whatsoever such principle there is, it was at the first found out by discourse, and drawn from out of the very bowels of heaven and earth. Hooker.

41. From under.
He, though blind of sight,
Despis'd, and thought extinguish'd quite,
With inward eyes illuminated,
His fiery virtue rous'd
From under ashes into sudden flame. Milt. Agonistes.

42. From within.
From within
The broken bowels, and the bloated skin
A buzzing noise of bees his ears alarms. Dryden.

FRO'MWARD. prep. [from and peapo, Sax.] Away from; the contrary to the word towards. Not now in use.
As cheerfully going towards as Pyrocles went froward fromward his death. Sidney.
The horizontal needle is continually varying towards East and West; and so the dipping or inclining needle is varying up and down, towards or fromwards the zenith. Cheyne.

FRONDI'FEROUS. adj. [frondifer, Lat.] Bearing leaves. Dict.

We may apply intercipients upon the temples of mastick: frontales may also be applied. Wiseman.
The torpedo, alive, stupefies at a distance; but after death produceth no such effect; which had they retained, they might have supplied opium, and served as frontals in phrensies. Brown.

FRO'NTATED. adj. [from frons, Lat.] In botany, the frontated leaf of a flower grows broader and broader, and at last perhaps terminates in a right line: used in opposition to cuspated, which is, when the leaves of a flower end in a point. Quincy

FRO'NTBOX. n. s. [front and box.] The box in the playhouse from which there is a direct view to the stage.
How vain are all these glories, all our pains,
Unless good sense preserve what beauty gains!
That men may say, when we the frontbox grace,
Behold the first in virtue, as in face. Pope.

FRO'NTED. adj. [from frons.] Formed with a front.
Part fronted brigades form. Milton.

FRO'NTIER. n. s. [frontiere, Fr.] The marches; the limit; the utmost verge of any territory; the border; properly that which terminates not at the sea, but fronts another country.
Draw all the inhabitants of those borders away, or plant garrisons upon all those frontiers about him. Spenser on Ireland.
I upon my frontiers here keep residence,
That little which is left so to defend. Milton.

FRO'NTIER. adj. Bordering; conterminous.
A place there lies on Gallia's utmost bounds,
Where rising seas insult the frontier grounds. Add.

FRONTROOM. n. s. [front and room.]

An apartment in the fore part of the house.

If your shop stands in an eminent street, the frontrooms are commonly more airy than the back-rooms; and it will be inconvenient to make the frontroom shallow Moxon

FRORE adj. [bevrozen, Dut. frozen.] Frozen. This word is not used since the time of Milton

The parching air
Burns frore, and cold performs th' effect of fire. Milt

FRORNE. adj. [bevrozen, frozen, Dut.] Frozen; congealed with cold. Obsolete.

O, my heart-blood is well nigh frorne I feel,
And my galage grown fast to my heel. Spenser's Past.

FROST. n. s. [frost, Sax.]

1. The last effect of cold; the power or act of congelation.

This is the state of man; to-day he puts forth
The tender leaves of hope, to-morrow blossoms
And bears his blushing honours thick upon him;
The third day comes a frost, a killing frost,
And when he thinks, good easy man, full surely
His greatness is a ripening, nips his root,
And then he falls. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

When the frost seizes upon wine, only the more waterish parts are congealed: there is a mighty spirit which can retreat into itself, and within its own compass lie secure from the freezing impression. South.

2. The appearance of plants and trees sparkling with congelation of dew.

Behold the groves that shine with silver frost,
Their beauty wither'd, and their verdure lost. Pope.

FRO'STBITTEN. adj. [frost and bitten.] Nipped or withered by the frost.

The leaves are too much frostbitten. Mortimer.

FRO'STED. adj. [from frost.] Laid on in inequalities like those of the hoar frost upon plants.

The rich brocaded silk unfold,
Where rising flow'rs grow stiff with frosted gold. Gay.

FRO'STILY. adv. [from frosty.]

1. With frost; with excessive cold.
2. Without warmth of affection.

Courtling, I rather thou should'st utterly
Dispraise my work, than praise it frostily. B. Jonson.

FRO'STINESS. n. s. [from frosty.] Cold; freezing cold.

FRO'STNAIL. n. s. [frost and nail.] A nail with a prominent head driven into the horse's shoes, that it may pierce the ice.

The claws are strait only to take hold, for better progression; as a horse that is shod with frost-nails. Grew's Cosmol.

FRO'STWORK. n. s. [frost and work.] Work in which the substance is laid on with inequalities, like the dew congealed upon shrubs.

By nature shap'd to various figures, those
The fruitful rain, and these the hail compose;
The snowy fleece and curious frostwork these,
Produce the dew, and those the gentle [illegible] Black

FRO'STY. adj. [from frost.]

1. Having the power of congelation; excessive cold.

For all my blood in Rome's great quarrel shed,
For all the frosty nights that I have watch'd,
Be pitiful to my condemned sons. Shak. Tit. Andron.

The air, if very cold, irritateth the flame, and maketh it burn more fiercely; as fire scorcheth in frosty weather. Bacon.

A gnat half-starved with cold and hunger, went out one frosty morning to a bee hive. L'Estrange.

2. Chill in affection; without warmth of kindness or courage.

What a frosty spirited rogue is this! Shakesp.

If it be banish'd from the frosty head,
Where shall it find a harbour in the earth? Shak.

FROTH. n. s. [froe, Dan. and Scott.]

1. Spume; foam; the bubbles caused in liquors by agitation.

His hideous tail then hurled he about
And therewith all enwrapt the nimble thighs
Of his froth foamy steed. Fairy Queen

When wind expireth from under the sea, as it causeth some resounding of the water, so it causeth some light motions of bubbles, and white circles of froth. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Surging waves against a solid rock,
Though all to shivers dash'd, th' assault renew;
Vain batt'ry, and in froth or bubbles end. Milton.

The useless froth swims on the surface, but the pearl lies covered with a mass of waters. Glanville.

The scatter'd ocean flies;
Black sands, discolour'd froth, and mingled mud arise. Dryden

They were the froth my raging folly mov'd
When it boil'd up; I knew not then I lov'd,
Yet then lov'd most. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

If now the colours of natural bodies are to be mingled, let water, a little thickened with soap, be agitated to raise a froth: and after that froth has stood a little, there will appear, to one that shall view it intently, various colours every where in the surfaces of the bubbles; but to one that shall go so far off that he cannot distinguish the colours from one another, the whole froth will grow white, with a perfect whiteness. Newton.

A painter, having finished the picture of a horse, excepting the loose froth about his mouth and his bridle, and after many unsuccessful essays, despairing to do that to his satisfaction, in a great rage threw a sponge at it, all besmeared with the colours, which fortunately hitting upon the right place, by one bold stroke of chance most exactly supplied the want of skill in the artist. Bent. Serm.

2. Any empty or senseless shew of wit or eloquence.

3. Any thing not hard, solid or substantial.

Who eateth his veal, pig and lamb being froth,
Shall twice in a week go to bed without broth. Tusser.

To FROTH. v. n. [from the noun.] To foam; to throw out spume; to generate spume.

He frets within, froths treason at his mouth,
And churns it through his teeth. Dryden.

Excess muddies the best wit, and only makes it flutter and froth high. Grew.

FRO'THILY. adv. [from frothy.]

1. With foam; with spume.
2. In an empty trifling manner.

FRO'THY. adj. [from froth.]

1. Full of foam; froth, or spume.

The sap of trees is of differing natures; some watery and clear, as vines, beeches, pears; some thick, as apples; some gummy, as cherries; and some frothy, as elms. Bacon.

Behold a frothy substance rise;
Be cautious, or your bottle flies. Swift.

2. Soft; not solid; wasting.

Their bodies are so solid and hard as you need not fear that bathing should make them frothy. Bac.

3. Vain; empty; trifling.

What's a voluptuous dinner, and the frothy vanity of discourse that commonly attends these pompous entertainments? What is it but a mortification to a man of sense and virtue? L'Estrange.

Though the principles of religion were never so clear and evident, yet they may be made ridiculous by vain and frothy men; as the gravest and wisest person in the world may be abused by being put into a fool's coat. Tillotson.

FROUNCE. n. s. A word used by falconers for a distemper, in which white spittle gathers about the hawk's bill. Skinn.

To FROUNCE. v. a. [from the noun.] To frizzle or curl the hair about the face. This word was at first probably used in contempt.

Some flounce their curled hair in courtly guise,
Some prank their ruffs, and others timely dight
Their gay attire. Fairy Queen.

Some warlike sign must be used; either a slovenly buskin, or an overstaring flounced head. Ascham.

Thus, night, oft see me in thy pale career,
Till civil suited morn appear;
Not trick'd and flounc'd as she was wont,
With the Attick boy to hunt. Milton.

FRO'UZY. adj. [A cant word.]

1. Fœtid; musty.

Petticoats in frousy heaps. Swift.

2. Dim; cloudy.

When first Diana leaves her bed,
Vapours and steams her looks disgrace;
A frousy dirty-colour'd red
Sits on her cloudy wrinkled face. Swift.

FRO'WARD. adj. [frampeard, Sax.] Peevish; ungovernable; angry; perverse: the contrary to toward.

The froward pain of mine own heart made me delight to punish him, whom I esteemed the chiefest let in the way. Sidney.

She's not froward, but modest as the morn: Shak.

Whose ways are crooked, and they froward in their paths. Prov. ii. 15.

Time moveth so round, that a froward retention of custom is as turbulent a thing as innovation. Bac.

'Tis with froward men, and froward factions too, as 'tis with froward children; they'll be sooner quieted by fear than by any sense of duty. L'Estr.

Motions occasion sleep, as we find by the common use and experience of rocking froward children in cradles. Temple.

FRO'WARDLY. adv. [from froward.] Peevishly; perversely.

I hid me and was wroth, and he went frowardly in the way of his heart. Is. lvii. 17.

FRO'WARDNESS. n. s. [from froward.] Peevishness; perverseness.

How many frowardnesses of ours does he smother? how many indignities does he pass by? how many affronts does he put up at our hands? South.

We'll mutually forget
The warmth of youth, and frowardness of age. Addison's Cato.

FRO'WER. n. s. [I know not the etymology.] A cleaving tool.

A frower of iron for cleaving of lath,
With roll for a sawpit, good husbandry hath. Tusser.

To FROWN. v. a. [frogner, old Fr. to wrinkle, Skinner.] To express displeasure by contracting the face to wrinkles; to look stern.

Say, that she frowns; I'll say, she looks as clear
As morning roses newly wash'd with dew. Shak.

They chuse their magistrate;
And such a one as he, who puts his shall,
His popular shall, against a graver bench
Than ever frown'd. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

How now, daughter, what makes that frontlet on? you are too much of late i' the frown.

—Thou was a pretty fellow, when thou hadst no need to care for her frowning. Shak. King Lear.

Heroes in animated marble frown. Pope.

The wood,
Whose shady horrors on a rising brow
Wav'd high, and frown'd upon the stream below,
Pope.

FROWN. n. s. [from the verb.] A wrinkled look; a look of displeasure.

Patiently endure that frown of fortune, and by some notable exploit win again her favour. Knolles

In his half-clos'd eyes
Stern vengeance yet and hostile terror stand;
His front yet threatens, and his frowns command.
Prior.

FRO'WNINGLY. adv. [from frown.] Sternly; with a look of displeasure.

What, look'd he frowningly?
—A countenance more in sorrow than in anger.
Shakesp.

FROWY. adj. Musty; mossy. This word is now not used; but instead of it frothy.

But if they with thistles should yode,
They soon might be annoyed;
Or filths not of the fairest fode,
Or with the weeds be spotted. Spenser's Pastorals.

FRO'ZEN. part. pass. of freeze.

1. Congealed with cold.

What was the waste of wild, what fierce alarms
Shook Asia's crown with European arms?
Ev'n such have heard, if any such there be,
Whose earth is bounded by the frozen sea. Dryden.
Fierce Boreas, with his offspring, issues forth
T' invade the frozen waggon of the North. Dryd.
A cheerful blaze arose, and by the fire
They warm'd their frozen feet, and dry'd their wet attire. Dryden's Flower and Leaf.

2. Chill in affection.

Against whom was the fine frozen knight, frozen in despair about his armour naturally representing ice, and all his furniture lively answering thereto. Sidney.

Be not ever frozen, coy;
One beam of love will soon destroy
And melt that ice to floods of joy. Carew.

3. Void of heat or appetite.

Even here, where frozen chastity retires,
Love finds an altar for forbidden fires. Pope.

FR. S. Fellow of the Royal Society.

Who virtù profess
Shine in the dignity of F. R. S. Pope.

FRUCTI'FEROUS. adj. [fructifer, Lat.] Bearing fruit. Ainsw.

To FRU'CTIFY. v. a. [fructifier, Fr.] To make fruitful; to fertilise.

The legal levies the sovereign raises are as vapours which the sun exhales, which fall down in sweet showers to fructify the earth. Howel's Vocal Forest.

Where'er she looks, behold some sudden birth
Adorns the trees, and fructifies the earth. Granv.

To FRU'CTIFY. v. n. To bear fruit.

It watereth the heart, to the end it may fructify; maketh the virtuous, in trouble, full of magnanimity and courage; and serveth as a most approved remedy against all doleful and heavy accidents which befal men in this present life. Hooker.

Thus would there nothing fructify, either near or under them, the sun being horizontal to the poles. Brown.

FRUCTIFICA'TION. n. s. [from fructify.] The act of causing or of bearing fruit; fecundation; fertility.

That the sap doth powerfully rise in the Spring, to put the plant in a capacity of fructification, he that hath beheld how many gallons of water may be drawn from a birch-tree, hath slender reason to doubt. Brown's Vulg. Err.

FRU'CTUOUS. adj. [fructueux, Fr. from fructify.] Fruitful; fertile; impregnating with fertility.

Apples of price, and plenteous sheaves of corn
Oft interlac'd occur; and both imbibe
Fitting congenial juice, so rich the soil,
So much does fructuous moisture o'erabound! Phil.

FRU'GAL. adj. [frugalis, Lat. frugal, Fr.] Thrifty; sparing; parsimonious; not prodigal; not profuse; not lavish.

Reasoning, I oft admire,
How nature wise and frugal could commit
Such disproportions, with superfluous hand
So many nobler bodies to create,
Greater so manifold to this one use. Milton.
And wing'd purveyors his sharp hunger fed
With frugal scraps of flesh and maslin bread. Harte.
If through mists he shoots his sullen beams,
Frugal of light, in loose and straggling streams,
Suspect a drizling day. Dryden's Virgil.

FRU'GALLY. adv. [from frugal.] Parsimoniously; sparingly; thriftily.

Meantime young Paulin and his marriage press'd,
And frugally resolv'd, the charge to shun,
To join his brother's bridal with his own. Dryden.

FRUGA'LITY. n. s. [frugalité, Fr. frugalitas, Lat.] Thrift; parsimony; good husbandry.

As for the general sort of men, frugality may be the cause of drinking water; for that is no small saving, to pay nothing for one's drink. Bacon.

Frugality and bounty too,
Those diff'ring virtues, meet in you. Waller.

In this frugality of your praises, some things I cannot omit. Dryden's Fables, Dedication.

The boundaries of virtues are indivisible lines: it is impossible to march up close to the frontiers of frugality, without entering the territories of parsimony. Arbuthnot's John Bull.

FRUGI'FEROUS. adj. [frugifer, Lat.] Bearing fruit. Ainsworth.

FRUIT. n. s. [fructus, Lat. fruyth, Welsh; fruit, Fr.]

1. The product of a tree or plant in which the seeds are contained.

The strawberry grows underneath the nettle,
And wholesome berries thrive and ripen best,
Neighbour'd by fruit of baser quality. Shakesp.

2. That part of a plant which is taken for food.

By tasting of that fruit forbid,
Where they sought knowledge, they did error find. Davies.

See how the rising fruits the gardens crown,
Imbibe the sun, and make his light their own. Blackmore.

3. Production.

The fruit of the spirit is in all goodness and righteousness, and truth. Ephes. v. 9.

4. The offspring of the womb; the young of any animal.

Can'st thou their reck'nings keep? the time compute,
When their swol'n bellies shall enlarge the fruit. Sandys.

5. Advantage gained by any enterprise or conduct.

What is become of all the king of Sweden's victories? Where are the fruits of them at this day? Or of what benefit will they be to posterity? Swift.

Another fruit, from considering things in themselves, will be, that each man will pursue his thoughts in that method which will be most agreeable to the nature of the thing, and to his apprehension of what it suggests to him. Locke.

6. The effect or consequence of any action.

She blushed when she considered the effect of granting; she was pale when she remembered the fruits of denying. Sidney.

They shall eat of the fruit of their own way. Prov.

FRU'ITAGE. n. s. [fruitage, Fr.] Fruit collectively; various fruits.

In heav'n the trees
Of life ambrosial fruitage bear, and vines
Yield nectar. Milton's Par. Lost.

Greedily they pluck'd
The fruitage, fair to sight, like that which grew
Near that bituminous lake where Sodom flam'd. Milton.

What is more ordinary with them than the making in flowers and fruitage for the adorning of their work? More.

FRU'ITBEARER. n. s. [fruit and bearer.] That which produces fruit.

Trees, especially fruitbearers, are often infected with the measles. Mortimer's Husbandry.

FRU'ITBEARING. adj. [fruit and bear.] Having the quality of producing fruit.

By this way graft trees of different kinds one on another, as fruitbearing trees on those that bear not. Mortimer.

FRUI'TERER. n. s. [fruitier, Fr.] One who trades in fruit.

I did fight with one Sampson Stockfish, a fruiterer, behind Gray's-inn. Shakesp. Henry IV.

Wainscots the fruiterer's hand in Autumn stain;
Blue plumbs and juicy pears augment his gain. Gay.

FRUI'TERY. n. s. [fruiterie, Fr.]

1. Fruit collectively taken.

Oft, notwithstanding all thy care
To help thy plants, on the small fruitery
Exempt from ills, an oriental blast
Disastrous flies. Philips.

2. A fruit-loft; a repository for fruit.

FRUI'TFUL. adj. [fruit and full.]

1. Fertile; abundantly productive; liberal of vegetable product.

If she continued cruel, he could no more sustain his life than the earth remain fruitful in the sun's continual absence. Sidney.

The Earth,
Though in comparison of Heav'n, so small,
Nor glist'ring, may of solid good contain
More plenty than the sun that barren shines,
Whose virtue on itself works no effect,
But in the fruitful earth. Milton.

2. Actually bearing fruit.

Adonis' gardens,
That one day bloom'd, and fruitful were the next. Shakesp.

3. Prolifick; childbearing; not barren.

Hear, Nature, hear! dear goddess, hear a father!
Suspend thy purpose, if thou did'st intend
To make this creature fruitful:
Into her womb convey sterility. Shakesp. K. Lear.

Male he created thee, but thy consort
Female for race; then bless'd mankind, and said,
Be fruitful, multiply, and fill the earth;
Subdue it, and throughout dominion hold. Milton.

I have copied Nature, making the youths amorous and the damsels fruitful. Gay.

Since you may
Suspect my courage, if I should not lay
The pawn I proffer shall be full as good. Dryden's Virgil.

2. With the whole effect.

'Tis the pencil, thrown luckily full upon the horse's mouth to express the foam, which the painter, with all his skill, could not perform without it. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

From harmony, from heavenly harmony,
This universal frame began:
From harmony to harmony,
Through all the compass of the notes it ran
The diapason closing full in man. Dryden.

3. Exactly.

Full in the centre of the sacred wood,
An arm ariseth of the Stygian flood. Addison.

Full nineteen sailors did the ship convey,
A shole of nineteen dolphins round her play. Addison.

4. Directly.

He met her full, but full of warefulness. Sidney.

He then confronts the bull,
And on his ample forehead aiming full,
The deadly stroke descending pierc'd the skull. Dryden.

At length resolv'd, he throws with all his force
Full at the temples of the warrior horse. Dryden.

5. It is placed before adverbs and adjectives, to intend or strengthen their signification.

Tell me why on your shield, so goodly scor'd,
Bear ye the picture of that lady's head?
Full lively is the semblant, though the substance dead. Spenser.

I was set at work
Among my maids; full little, God knows, looking
Either for such men or such business. Shakesp.

Full well ye reject the commandment. Mar. vii. 9.

Adam was all in tears, and to his guide
Lamenting turn'd full sad. Milton's Par. Lost.

You full little think that you must be the beginner of the discourse yourself. More's Divine Dial.

Full little thought of him the gentle knight. Dryden.

Full well the god his sister's envy knew,
And what her aims and what her arts pursue. Dryd.

There is a perquisite full as honest, by which you have the best part of a bottle of wine for yourself. Swift.

Full is much used in composition to intimate any thing arrived at its highest state, or utmost degree.

FULL-BLOWN. adj. [full and blown.]

1. Spread to the utmost extent, as a perfect blossom.

My glories are past danger; they're full-blown:
Things, that are blasted, are but in the bud. Denh.

My full-blown youth already fades apace;
Of our short being 'tis the shortest space! Dryden.

2. Stretched by the wind to the utmost extent.

He who with bold Cratinus is inspir'd,
With zeal and equal indignation fir'd;
Who at enormous villany turns pale,
And steers against it with a full-blown sail. Dryden.

FULL-BO'TTOMED. adj. [full and bottom.] Having a large bottom.

I was obliged to sit at home in my morning-gown, having pawned a new suit of cloaths and a full-bottomed wig for a sum of money. Guardian.

FULL-EA'RED. adj. [full and ear.] Having the heads full of grain.

As flames roll'd by the winds conspiring force,
O'er full-ear'd corn, or torrents raging course. Denham.

2. The state of abounding in any quality good or bad.
3. Completeness; such as leaves nothing to be desired.

Your enjoyments are so complete, I turn wishes into gratulations, and congratulating their fulness only wish their continuance. South.

4. Completeness from the coalition of many parts.

The king set forwards to London, receiving the acclamations and applauses of the people as he went; which indeed were true and unfeigned, as might well appear in the very demonstration and fulness of the cry. Bacon's Henry VII.

5. Completeness; freedom from deficiency.

In thy presence is fulness of joy. Psalms.

He is the half part of a blessed man,
Left to be finished by such as she;
And she a fair divided excellence,
Whose fulness of perfection lies in him. Shakesp.

6. Repletion; satiety.

I need not instance in the habitual intemperance of rich tables, nor the evil accidents and effects of fulness, pride and lust, wantonness and softness. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

7. Plenty; wealth.

To lapse in fulness
Is sorer than to lie for need; and falshood
Is worse in kings than beggars. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

8. Struggling perturbation; swelling in the mind.

A principal fruit of friendship is the ease and discharge of the fulness of the heart, which passions of all kinds do cause and induce. Bacon's Essays.

9. Largeness; extent.

There wanted the fulness of a plot, and variety of characters to form it as it ought; and perhaps something might have been added to the beauty of the style. Dryden.

10. Force of sound, such as fills the ear; vigour.

This sort of pastoral derives almost its whole beauty from a natural ease of thought and smoothness of verse; whereas that of most other kinds consists in the strength and fulness of both. Pope.

FU'LSOME. adj. [from full, Sax. foul.]

1. Nauseous; offensive.

He that brings fulsome objects to my view,
With nauseous images my fancy fills,
And all goes down like oxymel of squills. Roscom.

Now half the youth of Europe are in arms,
How fulsome must it be to stay behind,
And die of rank diseases here at home? Otway.

2. Rank; gross: to the smell.

White satyrion is of a dainty smell, if the plant puts forth white flowers only, and those not thin or dry, they are commonly of rank and fulsome smell. Bacon.

3. Lustful.

He stuck them up before the fulsome ewes. Shak.

4. Tending to obscenity.

A certain epigram, which is ascribed to the emperor, is more fulsome than any passage I have met with in our poet. Dryden.

Our mechanick theists will have their atoms never once to have fumbled in these their motions, nor to have produced any inept system. Cudworth.

2. To puzzle; to strain in perplexity.

Am not I a friend to help you out? You would have been fumbling half an hour for this excuse. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

3. To play childishly.

I saw him fumble with the sheets, and play with flowers, and smile upon his finger's end. Shakesp.

To* FU'MBLE. v. a. To manage awkwardly.

As many farewels as be stars in heav'n,
With distinct breath and consign'd kisses to them,
He fumbles up all in one loose adieu. Shakesp.

His greasy bald pate choir
Came fumbling o'er the beads, in such an agony
They told 'em false for fear. Dryd. Span. Fryar.

FU'MBLER. n. s. [from fumble.] One who acts awkwardly.

FU'MBLINGLY. adv. [from fumble.] In an awkward manner.

FUME. n. s. [fumée, Fr. fumus, Lat.]

1. Smoke.

Thus fighting fires awhile themselves consume;
Then straight, like Turks, forc'd on to win or die,
They first lay tender bridges of their fume,
And o'er the breach in unctuous vapours fly. Dryd.

2. Vapour; any volatile parts flying away.

Love is a smoke rais'd with the fume of sighs:
Being purg'd, a fire sparkling in lovers' eyes. Shak.

It were good to try the taking of fumes by pipes, as they do in tobacco, or other things, to dry and comfort. Bacon.

In Winter, when the heat without is less, breath becomes so far condensed as to be visible, flowing out of the mouth in form of a fume, or crasser vapour; and may, by proper vessels, set in a strong freezing mixture, be collected in a considerable quantity. Woodward.

3. Exhalation from the stomach.

The fumes of drink discompose and stupify the brains of a man overcharged with it. South.

Plung'd in sloth we lie, and snore supine,
As fill'd with fumes of undigested wine. Dryden.

Pow'r, like new wine, does your weak brain surprize,
And its mad fumes in your discourses rise;
But time these yielding vapours will remove:
Mean while I'll taste the sober joys of love. Dryd.

4. Rage; heat of mind; passion.

The fumes of his passion do really intoxicate and confound his judging and discerning faculty. South.

5. Any thing unsubstantial.

When Duncan is asleep, his two chamberlains
Will I with wine and wassel so convince,
That memory, the warder of the brain,
Shall be a fume. Shakesp. Macbeth.

6. Idle conceit; vain imagination.

Plato's great year would have some effect, not in renewing the state of like individuals; for that is the fume of those, that conceive the celestial bodies have more accurate influence upon these things below, than they have, but in gross. Bacon.

To lay aside all that may seem to have a shew of fumes and fancies, and to speak solids, a war with Spain is a mighty work. Bacon.

To FUME. v. n. [fumer, Fr. fumo, Lat.]

1. To smoke.

Their pray'rs pass'd
Dimensionless through heav'nly doors; then clad
With incense, where the golden altar fum'd
By the great intercessor; came in sight
Before their father's throne. Milton's Par. Lost.

From thence the fuming trail began to spread,
And lambent glories danc'd about her head. Dryd.

Strait hover round the fair her airy band;
Some, as she sipp'd, the fuming liquor fann'd. Pope.

2. To vapour; to yield exhalations, as by heat.

Tie up the libertine in a field of feasts,
Keep his brain fuming. Shak. Ant. and Cleopatra.

Silenus lay,
Whose constant cups lay fuming to his brain,
And always boil in each extended vein. Roscommon.

3. To pass away in vapours.

We have
No anger in our eyes, no storm, no lightning:
Our heat is spent and fum'd away in vapour,
Before our hands be at work. Ben Jonson's Catiline.

Their parts are kept from fuming away by their fixity, and also by the vast weight and density of the atmospheres incumbent upon them. Cheyne.

The first fresh dawn then wak'd the gladden'd race
Of uncorrupted man, nor blush'd to see
The sluggard sleep beneath its sacred beam:
For their light slumbers gentle fum'd away. Thoms.

4. To be in a rage; to be hot with anger.

When he knew his rival free'd and gone,
He swells with wrath; he makes outrageous moan:
He frets, he fumes, he stares, he stamps the ground,
The hollow tow'r with clamours ring around. Dryd.

To FUME. v. a.

1. To smoke; to dry in the smoke.

Those [illegible] for hot countries they used at first to fume, by hanging upon them long sticks one by one, and drying them with the smoke of a soft fire. Carew.

2. To perfume with odours in the

She fum'd the temples with an od'rous flame,
And oft before the sacred altars came,
To pray for him who was an empty name. Dryd.

The fuming of the holes with brimstone, garlick, and other unsavory things, will drive moles out of the ground. Mortimer.

3. To disperse in vapours.

The heat will fume away most of the scent. Mortimer.

FUM'ET. n. s. The dung of the deer.

FUMETTE. n. s. [Fr.] A word introduced by cooks, and the pupils of cooks, for the stink of meat.

With fragrant thyme the city fumigate,
And break the waxen walls to save the state. Dryd.

2. To medicate or heal by vapours.

FUMIGA'TION. n. s. [fumigatio, Lat. fumigation, Fr. from fumigate.]

1. Scents raised by fire.

Fumigations, often repeated, are very beneficial. Arbuthnot.

My fumigation is to Venus, just
The souls of roses, and red coral's dust:
And, last, to make my fumigation good,
'Tis mixt with sparrows brains and pigeons blood. Dryden.

2. The application of medicines to the body in fumes.

FU'MINGLY. adv. [from fume.] Angrily; in a rage.

That which we move for our better learning and instruction sake, turneth unto anger and chafer in them: they grow altogether out of quietness with it; they answer fumingly, that they are ashamed to defile their pens with making answer to such idle questions. Hooker.

FU'MITER. n. s. A plant.

Why, he was met even now,
As mad as the vext sea; singing aloud,
Crown'd with rank fumiter and furrow weeds. Sh.

FU'MOUS. } adj. [fumeux-se, Fr. from
FU'MY. } fume.] Producing fumes.

From dice and wine the youth retir'd to rest,
And puff'd the fumy god from out his breast:
Ev'n then he dreamt of drink and lucky play:
More lucky had it lasted 'till the day. Dryden

FUN. n. s. [A low cant word.] Sport; high merriment; frolicksome delight.

Don't mind me, though, for all my fun and jokes,
You bards may find us bloods good-natur'd folks. More.

FU'NCTION. n. s. [functio, Lat.]

1. Discharge; performance.

There is hardly a greater difference between two things than there is between a representing commoner in the function of his publick calling, and the same person in common life. Swift.

2. Employment; office.

The ministry is not now bound to any one tribe: now none is secluded from that function of any degree, state, or calling. Whitgifte.

You have paid the heav'ns your function, and the prisoner the very other debt of your calling. Shakesp. Measure for Measure.

Nor was it any policy or obstinacy, or partiality of affection either to the men or their function, which fixed me. King Charles.

This double function of the goddess gives a considerable light and beauty to the ode which Horace has addressed to her. Addison

Let not these indignities discourage us from asserting the just privileges and pre-eminence of our holy function and character. Atterbury.

3. Single act of any office.

Without difference those functions cannot, in orderly sort, be executed. Hooker.

They have several offices and prayers against fire, tempests, and especially for the dead, in which functions they use sacerdotal garments. Stillingfleet.

4. Trade; occupation.

Follow your function; go, and batten on cold bits. Shakesp.

5. Office of any particular part of the body.

The bodies of men, and other animals, are excellently well fitted for life and motion; and the several parts of them well adapted to their particular functions. Bentley's Sermons.

6. Power; faculty: either animal or intellectual.

Tears in his eyes, distraction in his aspect,
A broken voice, and his whole function suiting
With forms to his conceit. Shakesp. Hamlet.

Nature seems
In all her functions weary of herself:
My race of glory run, and race of shame;
And I shall shortly be with them that rest. Milton.

Whatever warms the heart, or fills the head,
As the mind opens, and its functions spread,
Imagination plies her dang'rous art,
And pours it all upon the peccant part. Pope.

Though every human constitution is morbid, yet are their diseases consistent with the common functions of life. Arbuthnot.

FUND. n. s. [fond, Fr. fundo a bag, Lat.]

1. Stock; capital; that by which any expence is supported.

He touches the passions more delicately than Ovid, and performs all this out of his own fund, without diving into the arts and sciences for a supply. Dryden.

Part must be left, a fund when foes invade,
And part employ'd to roll the watry tide. Dryden.

In preaching, no men succeed better than those who trust entirely to the stock or fund of their own reason, advanced indeed, but not overlaid by commerce with books. Swift.

2. Stock or bank of money.

As my estate has been hitherto either lost upon seas, or fluctuating in funds, it is now fixed in substantial acres. Addison.

FU'NDAMENT. n. s. [fundamentum, Lat.] The back part of the body.

FUNDAME'NTAL. adj. [fundamentalis, Lat. from fundament.] Serving for the foundation; that upon which the rest is built; essential; important; not merely accidental.

Until this can be agreed upon, one main and fundamental cause of the most grievous war is not like to be taken from the earth. Raleigh.

You that will be less fearful than discreet,
That love the fundamental part of state,
More than you doubt the charge of it. Shakesp.

Others, when they were brought to allow the throne vacant, thought the succession should go to the next heir, according to the fundamental laws of the kingdom, as if the last king were actually dead. Swift's Examiner.

Gain some general and fundamental truths, both in philosophy, in religion, and in human life. Watts.

Such we find they are, as can controul
The servile actions of our wav'ring soul,
Can fright, can alter, or can chain the will;
Their ills all built on life, that fundamental ill. Prior.

Yet some there were among the sounder few,
Of those who less presum'd, and better knew,
Who durst assert the juster ancient cause,
And here restor'd wit's fundamental laws. Pope.

FUNDAME'NTAL. n. s. Leading proposition; important and essential part which is the groundwork of the rest.

We propose the question, whether those who hold the fundamentals of faith may deny Christ damnably in respect of superstructures and consequences that arise from them. South.

It is a very just reproach, that there should be so much violence and hatred in religious matters among men who agree in all fundamentals, and only differ in some ceremonies, or mere speculative points. Swift.

FUNDAME'NTALLY. adv. [from fundamental.] Essentially; originally.

As virtue is seated fundamentally in the intellect, so perspectively in the fancy; so that virtue is the force of reason, in the conduct of our actions and passions to a good end. Grew.

Religion is not only useful to civil society, but fundamentally necessary to its very birth and constitution. Bentley.

The unlimited power placed fundamentally in the body of a people, the legislators endeavour to deposit in such hands as would preserve the people. Swift.

FU'NERAL. n. s. [funus, Lat. funerailles, French.]

1. The solemnization of a burial; the payment of the last honours to the dead; obsequies.

Here, under leave of Brutus, and the rest,
Come I to speak in Cæsar's funeral. Shakesp.

All things that we ordained festival,
Turn'd from their office to black funeral. Shakesp.

He that had cast out many unburied, had none to mourn for him, nor any solemn funerals, nor sepulchre with his fathers. 2 Mac. v. 10.

No widow at his funeral shall weep. Sandys.

2. The pomp or procession with which the dead are carried.

The long fun'rals blacken all the way. Pope.

You are sometimes desirous to see a funeral pass by in the street. Swift.

1. An inverted hollow cone with a pipe descending from it, through which liquors are poured into vessels with narrow mouths; a tundish.

If you pour a glut of water upon a bottle, it receives little of it; but with a funnel, and by degrees, you shall fill many of them. Ben Jonson.

Some the long funnel's curious mouth extend,
Through which ingested meats with ease descend. Blackm.

The outward ear or auricula is made hollow, and contracted by degrees, to draw the sound inward, to take in as much as may be of it, as we use a funnel to pour liquor into any vessel. Ray.

2. A pipe or passage of communication.

Towards the middle are two large funnels, bored through the roof of the grotto, to let in light or fresh air. Addison.

FUR. n. s. [fourrure, Fr.]

1. Skin with soft hair with which garments are lined for warmth, or covered for ornament.

December must be expressed with a horrid and fearful countenance; as also at his back a bundle of holly, holding in fur mittens the sign of Capricorn. Peacham on Drawing.

'Tis but dressing up a bird of prey in his cap and furs to make a judge of him. L'Estrange.

And lordly gout wrapt up in fur,
And wheezing asthma, loth to stir. Swift.

2. Soft hair of beasts found in cold countries, where nature provides coats suitable to the weather; hair in general.

This night, wherein the cubdrawn bear would couch,
The lion and the belly-pinched wolf
Keep their fur dry, unbonnetted he runs,
And bids what will take all. Shakesp. King Lear.

Such animals as feed upon flesh qualify it, the one by swallowing the hair or fur of the beasts they prey upon, the other by devouring some part of the feathers of the birds they gorge themselves with. Ray on the Creation.

3. Any moisture exhaled to such a degree as that the remainder sticks on the part.

Methinks I am not right in ev'ry part;
I feel a kind of trembling at my heart:
My pulse unequal, and my breath is strong;
Besides a filthy fur upon my tongue. Dryden.

To future men, and in their dwellings peace. Milt.
He sows the teeth at Pallas's command,
And flings the future people from his hand.
Addison's Ovid.

FU'TURE. n. s. [from the adjective.] Time to come; somewhat to happen hereafter.

Thy letters have transported me beyond
This ign'rant present time; and I feel now
The future in the instant. Shakesp. Macbeth.
The mind, once jaded by an attempt above its power, either is disabled for the future, or else checks at any vigorous undertaking ever after. Locke.

FU'TURELY. adv. [from future.] In time to come.

This prescience of God, as it is prescience, is not the cause of any thing futurely succeeding; neither doth God's aforeknowledge impose any necessity, or bind. Raleigh.

FUTURI'TION. n. s. [from future.] The state of being to be: the condition of being come to pass hereafter.

Is it imaginable that the great means of the world's redemption should rest only in the number of possibilities, and hang so lose in respect of its futurition, as to leave the event in an equal poise, whether ever there should be such a thing or no? South.

FUTU'RITY. n. s. [from future.]

1. Time to come; events to come.

Not my service past, nor present sorrows,
Nor purpos'd merit in futurity,
Can ransom me. Shakesp. Othello.
I will contrive some way to make it known to futurity, that I had your lordship for my patron. Swift.

2. Event to come.

All futurities are naked before that All-seeing Eye, the sight of which is no more hindred by distance of time than the sight of an angel can be determined by distance of place. South.
This, great Amphiarus, lay hid from thee,
Thou skill'd in fate and dark futurity. Pope.

3. The state of being to be; futurition.

It may be well reckoned among the bare possibilities, which never commence into a futurity; it requiring such a free, sedate and intent mind, as it may be, is no where found but among the platonical ideas. Glanville's Scepsis.

To FUZZ. v. n. [without etymology.] To fly out in small particles.

FU'ZZBALL. n. s. [fuzz and ball.] A kind of fungus which, when pressed, bursts and scatters dust in the eyes.

And fy on fortune, mine avowed foe,
Whose wrathful wreaks themselves do now allay. Spenser.
Fy, my lord, fy! a soldier, and afraid? What need we fear who knows it, when none can call our power to account? Shakesp.
A bawd, sir, fy upon him! Shakesp.
But fy, my waud'ring muse, how thou do'st stray!
Expectance calls thee now another way. Milton.
Nay, fy, what mean you in this open place?
Unhand me, or, I swear, I'll scratch your face:
Let go, for shame; you make me mad for spite:
My mouth's my own; and if you kiss, I'll bite. Dryden.
Fy, madam, he cried, we must be past all these gaieties. Tatler.

G.

G HAS two sounds, one from the Greek Γ, and the Latin, which is called that of the hard G, because it is formed by a pressure somewhat hard of the forepart of the tongue against the upper gum. This sound G retains before a, o, u, l, r; as, gate, go, gull. The other sound, called that of the soft G, resembles that of J, and is commonly, though not always, found before e, i; as, gem, gibbet. Before n, at the end of a word, g is commonly melted away; as in the French, from which these words are commonly derived: thus, for benign, malign, condign, we pronounce, benine, maline, condine. It is often silent in the middle of the word before h; as, might. The Saxon Γ, ȝ, seems to have had generally the sound of y consonant; whence gate is by rusticks still pronounced yate.

GA'BARDINE. n. s. [gavardina, Ital.] A coarse frock; any mean dress.

My best way is to creep under his gabardine; there is no other shelter hereabouts. Shakesp.
You call me misbeliever, cut-throat dog,
And spit upon my Jewish gabardine. Shakesp.
The knight did strait submit,
And laid his weapons at her feet:
Next he disrob'd his gabardine,
And with it did himself resign. Hudibras

To GA'BBLE. v. n. [gabbare, Ital. gabberen, Dut.]

1. To make an inarticulate noise.

When thou could'st not, savage,
Shew thine own meaning, but would'st gabble like
A thing most brutish, I endow'd thy purposes
With words that made them known. Shakesp.
Flocks of fowl, that when the tempest roar,
With their hoarse gabbling seek the silent shoar. Dryden.

2. To prate loudly without meaning.

Have you no wit, manners, nor honesty, but to gabble like tinkers at this time of night? Do ye make an alehouse of my lady's house? Shakesp. Twelfth Night.
Which made some think, when he did gabble,
Th' had heard three labourers of Babel. Hudibras.
Such a rout, and such a rabble,
Run to hear Jack Pudding gabble. Swift.

GA'BBLE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Inarticulate noise like that of brute animals.

Not to know what we speak one to another, so we seem to know, is to know straight our purpose: chough's language, gabble enough and good enough. Shakesp. All's well that ends well.

2. Loud talk without meaning.

Forthwith a hideous gabble rises loud
Among the builders; each to other calls,
Not understood. Milton's Paradise Lost.

GA'BBLER. n. s. [from gabble.] A prater; a chattering fellow.

GA'BEL. n. s. [gabello, Fr. gabella, Ital. ȝaȝel, Sax. a tribute.] An excise; a tax.

GA'BLE. n. s. [gaval, Welsh; gable, Fr.] The sloping roof of a building.

Take care that all your brick-work be covered with the tiling, according to the new way of building, without gable ends, which are very heavy, and very apt to let the water into the brick-work. Mortimer's Husbandry.

GAD. n. s. [ȝab, Sax. gaddur, Islandick, a club.]

1. A wedge or ingot of steel.

Flemish steel is brought down the Rhine to Dort, and other parts, some in bars, and some in gads, and therefore called Flemish steel, and sometimes gad steel. Moxon's Mech. Exer.

2. It seems to be used by Shakespeare for a stile or graver, [from ȝab, Sax. a goad.]

I will go get a leaf of brass,
And with a gad of steel will write these words. Shakesp.

To GAD. v. n. [Derived by Skinner from gadfly; by Junius from gadaw, Welsh, to forsake; thought by others only the preterite of the old word ȝaan to go.] To ramble about without any settled purpose; to rove loosely and idly.

How now, my headstrong, where have you been gadding?
—Where I have learnt me to repent. Shakesp.
Give the water no passage, neither a wicked woman liberty to gad abroad. Eccles. xxv. 25.
The lesser devils arose with ghastly rore,
And thronged forth about the world to gad;
Each land they fill'd, river, stream and shore. Fairfax.
Envy is a gadding passion, and walketh the streets, and doth not keep home. Bacon.
Gad not abroad at ev'ry quest and call
Of an untrained hope or passion;
To court each place or fortune that doth fall,
Is wantonness in contemplation. Herbert.
Thee, shepherd, thee the woods and desart caves,
With wild thyme and the gadding vine o'ergrown,
And all their echo's moan. Milton.
A fierce loud buzzing breese; their stings draw blood,
And drive the cattle gadding through the wood. Dry.
She wreaks her anger on her rival's head;
With furies frights her from her native home,
And drives her gadding, round the world to roam. Dryden.

There's an ox lost, and this coxcomb runs a gadding after wild fowl. L'Estrange.

No wonder their thoughts should be perpetually shifting from what disgusts them, and seek better entertainment in more pleasing objects, after which they will unavoidably be gadding. Locke.

GADDER. n. s. [from gad.] A rambler; one that runs much abroad without business.

A drunken woman, and a gadder abroad, causeth great anger, and she will not cover her own shame. Eccles. xxvi. 8.

GA'DDINGLY. adv. [from gad.] In a rambling, roving manner.

GA'DFLY. n. s. [gad and fly: but by Skinner, who makes it the original of gad, it is called goadfly. Supposed to be originally from goad, in Saxon ȝad, and fly.] A fly that when he stings the cattle makes them gad or run madly about; the breese.

The fly called the gadfly breedeth of somewhat that swimmeth upon the top of the water, and is most about ponds. Bacon's Nat. History.

To GAG. v. n. [from gaghel, Dut. the palate, Minshew.] To stop the mouth with something that may allow to breathe, but hinder to speak.

He's out of his guard already; unless you laugh and minister occasion to him, he is gagg'd. Shakesp. Twelfth Night.

There foam'd rebellious logick, gagg'd and bound. Pope.

GAG. n. s. [from the verb.] Something put into the mouth to hinder speech or eating.

Some, when the kids their dams too deeply drain,
With gags and muzzles their soft mouths restrain. Dryden.

Your woman would have run up stairs before me; but I have secured her below with a gag in her chaps. Dryden.

GAGE. n. s. [gage, Fr.]

1. A pledge; a pawn; a caution; any thing given in security.

He, when the shamed shield of slain Sansfoy
He spy'd, with that same fairy champion's page,
He to him leapt; and that same envious gage,
Of victor's glory from him snatcht away. Fairy Queen.

There I throw my gage,
Disclaiming here the kindred of a king,
And lay aside my high blood's royalty. Shakesp.

There is my gage, the manual seal of death,
That marks thee out for hell. Shakesp.

They from their mothers breasts poor orphans rend,
Nor without gages to the needy lend. Sandys.

I am made the cautionary pledge,
The gage and hostage of your keeping it. Southern.

But since it was decreed, auspicious king,
In Britain's right that thou should'st wed the main,
Heav'n, as a gage, would cast some previous thing,
And therefore doom'd that Lawson should be slain. Dryden.

In any truth, that gets not possession of our minds by self-evidence or demonstration, the arguments that gain it assent, are the vouchers and gage of its probability. Locke.

2. A measure; a rule of measuring.

One judges, as the weather dictates, right
The poem is at noon, and wrong at night;
Another judges by a surer gage,
An author's principles or parentage. Young.

GALA'NGAL. n. s. [galange, Fr.] A medicinal root.

The lesser galangal is in pieces, about an inch or two long, of the thickness of a man's little finger; a brownish red colour, extremely hot and pungent. The larger galangal is in pieces, about two inches or more in length, and an inch in thickness: its colour is brown, with a faint cast of red in it: it has a disagreeable, but much less acrid and pungent taste. Hill.

GALA'XY. n. s. [γαλαξία; galaxie, Fr.] The milky way: a stream of light in the sky, consisting of many small stars.

A broad and ample road, whose dust is gold,
And pavement stars, as stars to thee appear,
Seen in the galaxy. Milton's Paradise Lost.

A brown, for which heaven would disband
The galaxy, and stars be tann'd. Cleaveland.

Several lights will not be seen,
If there be nothing else between;
Men doubt, because they stand so thick i' th' sky,
If those be stars that paint the galaxy. Cowley.

We dare not undertake to shew what advantage is brought to us by those innumerable stars in the galaxy. Bentley.

GA'LBANUM. n. s.

We meet with galbanum sometimes in loose granules, called drops of tears, which is the purest, and sometimes in large masses. It is soft, like wax, and ductile between the fingers; of a yellowish or reddish colour: its smell is strong and disagreeable. It is of a middle nature between a gum and a resin, being inflammable as a resin, and soluble in water as a gum, and will not dissolve in oil as pure resins do. It is the produce of an umbelliferous plant. Hill.

It yielded indeed a pleasant odour, like the best myrrh; as galbanum. Eccles. xxiv. 15.

GALE. n. s. [gahling hasty, sudden, German.] A wind not tempestuous, yet stronger than a breeze.

What happy gale
Blows you to Padua here, from old Verona? Shak.

GALERI'CULATE. adj. [from galerus, Lat.] Covered as with a hat.

GA'LIOT. n. s. [galiotte. Fr.] A little galley or sort of brigantine, built very slight and fit for chase. It carries but one mast, and two or three pattereroes. It can both sail and row, and has sixteen or twenty seats for the rowers, with one man to each oar. Dict.

Barbarossa sent two notable pyrates with thirty galiots, who, landing their men, were valiantly encountered and forced again to their galiot. Knolles's History.

GALL. n. s. [ȝeala, Sax. galle, Dut.]

1. The bile, an animal juice remarkable for its supposed bitterness.

Come to my woman's breas'
And take my milk for gall, you murthering ministers! Shakesp.

A honey tongue, a heart of gall,
Is fancy's spring, but sorrow's fall. Shakesp.

This position informs us of a vulgar errour, terming the gall bitter, as their proverb implies It's as bitter as gall; whereas there is nothing gustable sweeter; and what is most unctuous must needs partake of a sweet savour. Harvey.

Gall is the greatest resolvent of curdled milk: Boerhaave has given at a time one drop of the gall of an eel with success. Arbuthnot on Diet.

2. The part which contains the bile.

The married couple, as a testimony of future concord, did cast the gall of the sacrifice behind the altar. Brown.

3. Any thing extremely bitter.

Thither write, my queen
And with mine eyes I'll drink the words you send,
Though ink be made of gall. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

Poison be their drink!
Gall, worse than gall, the daintiest meat they taste! Shakesp.

She still insults, and you must still adore;
Grant that the honey's much, the gall is more.
Dryden's Juvenal.

4. Rancour; malignity.

They did great hurt unto his title, and have left a perpetual gall in the minds of the people.
Spenser on Ireland.

Though he before had gall and rage;
He grows dispirited and low,
He hates the fight, and shuns the blow. Prior.

6. A slight hurt by fretting off the skin. [From the verb.]

This is the fatalist wound; as much superior to the former, as a gangrene is to a gall or scratch.
Government of the Tongue.

7. [From galla.]

Galls or galnuts are preternatural and accidental tumours, produced on trees; but those of the oak only are used in medicine. We have Oriental and European galls: the Oriental are brought from Aleppo, of the bigness of a large nutmeg, with tubercles on their surface, of a very firm texture, and a disagreeable, acerb, and astringent taste. The European galls are of the same size, with perfectly smooth surfaces: they are light, often spongy, and cavernous within, and always of a lax texture. They have a less austere taste, and are of much less value than the first sort. The general history of galls is this: An insect of the fly kind wounds the branches of the trees, and in the hole deposites her egg; the lacerated vessels of the tree discharging their contents, form a tumour or woody case about the hole, where the egg is thus defended from all injuries. This tumour also serves for the food of the tender maggot, produced from the egg, which, as soon as it is in its winged state, gnaws its way out, as appears from the hole found in the gall; and where no hole is seen, the maggot, or its remains, are sure to be found within. It has been observed, that the oak does not produce galls in cold countries: but this observation shall be confined to the medicinal galls; for all those excrescencies which we call oak-apples, oak-grapes, and oak-cones, are true galls, though less firm in their texture.
Hill.

Besides the acorns, the oak beareth galls, oak-apples, and oak-nuts. Bacon's Natural History.

Malpighi, in his treatise of galls, under which name he comprehends all preternatural and morbose excrescences, demonstrates that all such excrescences, where any insects are found, are excited by some venenose liquor, which, together with their eggs, such insects shed.
Ray on the Creation.

The Aleppo galls, wherewith we make ink, are no other than cases of insects, which are bred in them. Derham.

To GALL. v. a. [galer, Fr.]

1. To hurt by fretting the skin.

I'll touch my point
With this contagion, that, if I gall him slightly,
It may be death. Shakesp. Hamlet.

His yoke is easy, when by us embrac'd;
But loads and galls, if on our necks 'tis cast.
Denham.

A carrier, when he would think of a remedy for his galled horse, begins with casting his eye upon all things. Locke.

On the monarch's speech Achilles broke,
And furious thus, and interrupting spoke,
Tyrant, I well deserved thy galling chain. Pope.

2. To impair; to wear away.

He doth object, I am too great of birth;
And that my state being galled with my expence,
I seek to heal it only by his wealth. Shakesp.

If it should fall down in a continual stream like a river, it would gall the ground, wash away plants by the roots, and overthrow houses. Ray.

3. To teaze; to fret; to vex.

In honour of that action, and to gall their minds who did not so much commend it, he wrote his book. Hooker.

What they seem contented with, even for that very cause we reject; and there is nothing but it pleaseth us the better, if we espy that it galleth them. Hooker.

When I shew justice,
I pity those I do not know;
Which a dismiss'd offence would after gall. Shak.

All studies here I solemnly defy,
Save how to gall and pinch this Bolingbroke.
Shakesp. Henry IV.

No man commits any sin but his conscience smites him, and his guilty mind is frequently galled with the remembrance of it. Tillotson.

4. To harass; to mischief; to keep in a state of uneasiness.

The Helots had gotten new heart, and with divers sorts of shot from corners of streets and house-windows galled them. Sidney.

Light demilances from afar they throw,
Fasten'd with leathern thongs, to gall the foe.
Dryden's Æneid.

In our wars against the French of old, we used to gall them with our long bows, at a greater distance than they could shoot their arrows.
Addison.

To GALL. v. n. To fret.

I have seen you gleeking and galling at this gentleman twice or thrice. Shakesp.

GA'LLANT. adj. [galant, Fr. from gala fine dress, Span.]

1. Gay; well dressed; showy; splendid; magnificent.

A place of broad rivers, wherein shall go no galley with oars, neither shall gallant ships pass thereby. Is. xxxiii. 21.

The gay, the wise, the gallant, and the grave,
Subdu'd alike, all but one passion have. Waller.

2. Brave; high spirited; daring; magnanimous.

Scorn, that any should kill his uncle, made him seek his revenge in manner gallant enough. Sidney.

But, fare thee well, thou art a gallant youth.
Shakesp.

A gallant man, whose thoughts fly at the highest game, requires no further insight. Digby.

3. Fine; noble; spacious.

There are no tricks in plain and simple faith;
But hollow men, like horses hot at hand,
Make gallant shew and promise of their mettle.
Shakesp

4. Courtly with respect to ladies.

He discoursed, how gallant and how brave a thing it would be for his highness to make a journey into Spain, and to fetch home his mistress.
Clarendon.

When first the soul of love is sent abroad,
The gay troops begin
In gallant thought to plume their painted wings.
Thomson.

GA'LLANT. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. A gay, sprightly, airy, splendid man.

The new proclamation.
—What is't for?
—The reformation of our travell'd gallants,
That fill the court with quarrels, talk, and taylors.
Shakesp.

The gallants and lusty youths of Naples came and offered themselves unto Vastius. Knolles.

The gallants, to protect the lady's right,
Their fauchions brandish'd at the grisly spright.
Dryden.

Gallants, look to't, you say there are no sprights;
But I'll come dance about your beds at nights.
Dryden.

2. A whoremaster, who caresses women to debauch them.

One, worn to pieces with age, shews himself a young gallant. Shakesp.

She had left the good man at home, and brought away her gallant. Addison's Spectator.

4. Courtship; refined address to women.

The martial Moors, in gallantry refin'd,
Invent new arts to make their charmers kind.
Granville

5. Vicious love; lewdness; debauchery.

It looks like a sort of compounding between virtue and vice, as if a woman were allowed to be vicious, provided she be not a profligate; as if there were a certain point where gallantry ends, and infamy begins. Swift.

GA'LLEASS. n. s. [galeas, Fr.] A heavy low-built vessel, with both sails and oars. It carries three masts, but they cannot be lowered, as in a galley. It has thirty two seats for rowers, and six or seven slaves to each. They carry three tire of guns at the head, and at the stern there are two tire of guns. Dict.

The Venetians pretend they could set out, in case of great necessity, thirty men of war, a hundred galleys, and ten galleasses. Addison on Italy.

My father hath no less
Than three great argosies, besides two galleasses.
And twelve tight gallies. Shakes.

GALLE'ON. n. s. [galion, Fr.] A large ship with four or sometimes five decks, now in use only among the Spaniards.

I assured them that I would stay for them at Trinidado, and that no force should drive me thence, except I were sunk, or set on fire by the Spanish galleons. Raleigh's Apology.

The number of vessels were one hundred and thirty, whereof gallasses and galleons seventy-two, goodly ships, like floating towers or castles.
Bacon's War with Spain.

GA'LLERY. n. s. [galerie, Fr. derived by Du Cange from galeria, low Latin, a fine room.]

1. A kind of walk along the floor of a house, into which the doors of the apartments open; in general, any building of which the length much exceeds the breadth.

In most part there had been framed by art such pleasant arbours, that, one answering another, they became a gallery aloft from tree to tree, almost round about, which below gave a perfect shadow. Sidney.

High lifted up were many lofty towers,
And goodly galleries fair overlaid. Spenser.

Your gallery
Have we pass'd through, not without much content. Shakesp.

The row of return on the banquet side, let it be all stately galleries, in which galleries let there be three cupolas. Bacon.

A private gallery 'twixt th' apartments led,
Not to the foe yet known. Denham.

Nor is the shape of our cathedrals proper for our preaching auditories, but rather the figure of an amphitheatre, with galleries gradually overlooking each other; for into this condition the parish churches of London are driving apace, as appears by the many galleries every day built in them. Graunt.

There are covered galleries that lead from the palace to five different churches. Addison.

2. The seats in the playhouse above the pit, in which the meaner people sit.

While all its throats the gallery extends,
And all the thunder of the pit ascends. Pope.

GA'LLETYLE. n. s. I suppose this word has the same import with gallipot.

Make a compound body of glass and galletyle; that is, to have the colour milky like a chalcedon, being a stuff between a porcellane and a glass. Bacon's Phys. Rem.

GA'LLEY. n. s. [galea, Ital. galere, Fr. derived, as some think, from galea a helmet, pictured anciently on the prow; as others from γαλεώτης the sword-fish; as others from galleon, expressing in Syriac men exposed to the sea. From galley come galleass, galleon, galliot.

1. A vessel driven with oars, much in use in the Mediterranean, but found unable to endure the agitation of the main ocean.

Great Neptune grieved underneath the load
Of ships, hulks, gallies, barks, and brigandines. Fairfax.

In the ages following, navigation did every where greatly decay, by the use of gallies, and such vessels as could hardly brook the ocean. Bacon.

Jason ranged the coasts of Asia the Less in an open boat or kind of galley. Raleigh's History.

On oozy ground his gallies moor;
Their heads are turn'd to sea, their sterns to shore. Dryden.

2. It is proverbially considered as a place of toilsome misery, because criminals are condemned to row in them.

The most voluptuous person, were he tied to follow his hawks and his hounds, his dice and his courtships every day, would find it the greatest torment that could befal him: he would fly to the mines and the gallies for his recreation, and to the spade and the mattock for a diversion from the misery of a continual uninterrupted pleasure. South.

GA'LLEY-SLAVE. n. s. [galley and slave.] A man condemned for some crime to row in the gallies.

As if one chain were not sufficient to load poor men, he must be clogged with innumerable chains: this is just such another freedom as the Turkish galley-slaves do enjoy. Bramh.

Hardened galley-slaves despise manumission. Decay of Piety.

The surges gently dash against the shore,
Flocks quit the plains, and galley-slaves their oar. Garth.

GA'LLIARD. n. s. [gaillard, Fr. imagined to be derived from the Gaulish gard genius, and gay.]

1. A gay, brisk, lively man; a fine fellow.

Selden is a galliard by himself. Cleaveland.

2. An active, nimble, sprightly dance. It is in both senses now obsolete.

I did think, by the excellent constitution of thy leg, it was form'd under the star of a galliard. Shakesp. Twelfth Night.

There's nought in France
That can be with a nimble galliard won:
You cannot revel into dukedoms there. Shakesp.

If there be any that would take up all the time, let him find means to take them off, and bring others on; as musicians used to do with those that dance too long galliards. Bacon.

The tripla's and changing of times have an agreement with the changes of motion; as when gallard time and measure time are in the medley of one dance. Bacon

GA'LLIARDISE. n. s. [Fr.] Merriment; exuberant gaiety. Not in use.

At my nativity my ascendant was the watery sign of Scorpius: I was born in the planetary hour of Saturn, and I think I have a piece of that leaden planet in me; I am no way facetious, nor disposed for the mirth and galliardise of company. Brown.

GA'LLICISM. n. s. [gallicisme, Fr. from gallicus, Lat.] A mode of speech peculiar to the French language: such as, he figured in controversy; he held this conduct; he held the same language that another had held before: with many other expressions to be found in the pages of Bolingbroke.

In English I would have gallicisms avoided, that we may keep to our own language, and not follow the French mode in our speech. Felton on the Class.

GA'LLIGASKINS. n. s. [Caligæ Gallo-Vasconum, Skinner.] Large open hose. Not used but in ludicrous language.

My galligaskins, that have long withstood
The Winter's fury, and encroaching frosts,
By time subdu'd, what will not time subdue,
An horrid chasm disclose. Philips.

GALLIMA'TIA. n. s. [galimathias, Fr.] Nonsense; talk without meaning.

GALLIMAU'FRY. n. s. [galimafrée, Fr.]

Plato said his master Socrates was like the apothecary's gallipots, that had on the outsides apes, owls, and satyrs; but within, precious drugs. Bacon's Apophth.

Here phials in nice discipline are set;
Their gallipots are rang'd in alphabet. Garth.

Alexandrinus thought it unsafe to trust the real secret of his phial and gallipot to any man. Spect.

Thou that dost Æsculapius decide,
And o'er his gallipots, in triumph ride. Fenton.

GA'LLON. n. s. [gelo, low Lat.] A liquid measure of four quarts.

Beat them into powder, and boil them in a gallon of wine, in a vessel close stopped. Wiseman's Surg.

GALLO'ON. n. s. [galon, Fr.] A kind of close lace made of gold or silver, or of silk alone.

To GA'LLOP. v. n. [galoper, Fr.] Derived by all the etymologists, after Budæus, from καλωπάζειν; but perhaps it comes from gant all, and loopen to run, Dut. that is, to go on full speed.]

1. To move forward by leaps, so that all the feet are off the ground at once.

I did hear
The galloping of horse: who was't come by? Shak.

His steeds will be restrain'd,
But gallop lively down the western hill. Donne.

In such a shape grim Saturn did restrain
His heav'nly limbs, and flow'd with such a mane,
When half surpriz'd, and fearing to be seen,
The leacher gallop'd from his jealous queen. Dryd.

2. To ride at the pace which is performed by leaps.

Seeing such streams of blood as threatened a drowning life, we galloped toward them to part them. Sidney.

They 'gan espy
An armed knight towards them gallop fast,
That seem'd from some feared foe to fly. Fairy Q.

He who fair and softly goes steadily forward, in a course that points right, will sooner be at his journey's end than he that runs after every one he meets, though he gallop all day full speed. Locke.

3. To move very fast.

The golden sun
Gallops the zodiack in his glist'ring coach. Shakesp.

Whom doth time gallop withal?
—With a thief to the gallows. Shakesp.

He that rides post through a country may, from the transient view, tell how in general the parts lie: such superficial ideas he may collect in galloping over it. Locke.

GALLOP. n. s. [from the verb.] The motion of a horse when he runs at full speed; in which, making a kind of a leap forwards, he lifts both his forelegs very near at the same time; and while these are in the air, and just upon the point of touching the ground, he lifts both his hindlegs almost at once. Farrier's Dict.

GA'LLOPER. n. s. [from gallop.]

1. A horse that gallops.

Mules bred in cold countries are much better to ride than horses for their walk and trot; but they are commonly rough gallopers, though some of them are very fleet. Mortimer's Husbandry.

2. A man that rides fast, or makes great haste.

GA'LLOWAY. n. s. A horse not more than fourteen hands high, much used in the North; probably as coming originally from Galloway, a shire in Scotland.

To GA'LLOW. v. a. [azælpan to fright, Sax.] To terrify; to fright.

The wrathful skies
Gallow the very wand'rers of the dark,
And make them keep their caves. Shakesp.

GA'LLOWGLASSES. n. s.

1. It is worn likewise of footmen under their shirts of mail, the which footmen the Irish call gallowglasses: the which name doth discover them also to be ancient English; for gallogla signifies an English servitor or yeoman. And he being so armed in a long shirt of mail, down to the calf of his leg, with a long broad ax in his hand, was then pedes gravis armaturæ; and was instead of the footman that now weareth a corslet, before the corslet was used, or almost invented. Spenser on Ireland.

2 [Hanmer, otherwise than Spenser.] Soldiers among the wild Irish, who serve on horseback.

A puissant and mighty pow'r
Of gallowglasses and stout kernes,
Is marching hitherward in proud array. Shakesp.

GA'LLOW. } n. s. [It is used by some in
GA'LLOWS. } the singular; but by more only in the plural, or sometimes has another plural gallowses. Galgo, Goth. ȝealȝa, Sax. galge, Dut. which some derive from gabalus furca, Lat. others from גבה high, others from gallu, Welsh, power: but it is probably derived like gallow to fright, from aȝælpan, the gallows being the great object of legal terrour.]

1. A beam laid over two posts, on which malefactors are hanged.

This monster sat like a hangman upon a pair of gallows: in his right hand he was painted holding a crown of laurel, in his left hand a purse of money. Sidney.

I would we were all of one mind, and one mind good; O, there were desolation of gaolers and gallowses. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

I prophesied if a gallows were on land,
This fellow could not drown. Shakesp. Tempest.

He took the mayor aside, and whispered him that execution must that day be done, and therefore required him that a pair of gallows should be erected. Hayward.

A poor fellow, going to the gallows, may be allowed to feel the smart of wasps while he is upon Tyburn road. Swift.

GA'MBOGE. n. s.

Gamboge is a concreted vegetable juice, partly of a gummy, partly of a resinous nature, heavy, of a bright yellow colour, and scarce any smell. It is brought from America and the East Indies, particularly from Cambaja, or Cambogia. Hill.

To GA'MBOL. v. n. [gambiller, Fr.]

1. To dance; to skip; to frisk; to jump for joy; to play merry frolicks.

Bears, tigers, ounces, pards,
Gambol'd before them. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The king of elfs, and little fairy queen,
Gambol'd on heaths, and danc'd on ev'ry green. Dryden.

The monsters of the flood
Gambol around him in the wat'ry way,
And heavy whales in awkward measures play. Pope.

2. To leap; to start.

'Tis not madness
That I have utter'd; bring me to the test,
And I the matter will record, which madness
Would gambol from. Shakesp. Hamlet.

GA'MBOL. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A skip; a hop; a leap for joy.

A gentleman had got a favourite spaniel, that would be still toying and leaping upon him, and playing a thousand pretty gambols. L'Estrange.

Bacchus through the conquer'd Indies rode,
And beasts in gambols frisk'd before their honest god. Dryden.

2. A frolick; a wild prank.

For who did ever play his gambols,
With such unsufferable rambles! Hudibras.

GA'MBREL. n. s. [from gamba, gambarella, Ital.] The leg of a horse.

What can be more admirable than for the principles of the fibres of a tendon to be so mixed as to make it a soft body, and yet to have the strength of iron? as appears, by the weight which the tendon, lying on a horse's gambrel, doth then command, when he rears up with a man upon his back Grew.

GAME. n. s. [gaman a jest, Islandick.]

1. Sport of any kind.

We have had pastimes here, and pleasing game Shakesp

2. Jest; opposed to earnest or seriousness.

Then on her head they set a garland green,
And crowned her 'twixt earnest and 'twixt game. Spenser.

3. Insolent merriment; sportive insult.

Do they not seek occasion of new quarrels,
On my refusal, to distress me more;
Or make a game of my calamities? Milton's Ag.

4. A single match at play.

5. Advantage in play.

Mutual vouchers for our fame we stand,
And play the game into each other's hand. Dryden.

6. Scheme pursued; measures planned.

This seems to be the present game of that crown, and that they will begin no other 'till they see an end of this. Temple.

7. Field sports: as, the chace, falconry.

If about this hour he make his way,
Under the colour of his usual game,
He shall here find his friends with horse and men,
To set him free from his captivity. Shakesp.

What arms to use, or nets to frame
Wild beasts to combat, or to tame,
With all the myst'ries of that game } Waller.

Some sportsmen, that were abroad upon game, spied a company of bustards and cranes. L'Estran.

8. Animals pursued in the field; animals appropriated to legal sportsmen.

Hunting, and men, not beasts, shall be his game,
With war, and hostile snare, such as refuse
Subjection to his empire tyrannous. Milton.

There is such a variety of game springing up before me, that I know not which to follow. Dryden.

A bloodhound will follow the person he pursues, and all hounds the particular game they have in chace. Arbuthnot.

Go, with thy Cynthia hurl the pointed spear
At the rough bear, or chace the flying deer;
I and my Chloe take a nobler aim,
At human hearts we fling, nor ever miss the game. Prior.

Proud Nimrod first the bloody chace began,
A mighty hunter, and his prey was man:
Our haughty Norman boasts that barb'rous name.
And makes his trembling slaves the royal game. Pope.

Shorten my labour, if its length you blame,
For, grow but wise, you rob me of my game. Young.

9. Solemn contests, exhibited as spectacles to the people.

The games are done, and Cæsar is returning. Shakesp.

GA'MESOMELY. adv. [from gamesome.] Merrily.

GA'MESTER. n. s. [from game.]

1. One who is vitiously addicted to play.

Keep a gamester from the dice, and a good student from his book, and it is wonderful. Shakesp.

A gamester, the greater master he is in his art, the worse man he is. Bacon.

Gamesters for whole patrimonies play;
The steward brings the deeds, which must convey
The whole estate. Dryden's Juvenal.

Could we look into the mind of a common gamester, we should see it full of nothing but trumps and mattadores: her slumbers are haunted with kings, queens, and knaves. Addison.

All the superfluous whims relate,
That fill a female gamester's pate;
What agony of soul she feels
To see a knave's inverted heels. Swift.

Her youngest daughter is run away with a gamester, a man of great beauty, who in dressing and dancing has no superior. Law.

2. One who is engaged at play.

When lenity and cruelty play for kingdoms,
The gentler gamester is the soonest winner. Shak.

A man may think, if he will, that two eyes see no more than one; or that a gamester seeth always more than a looker-on: but, when all is done, the help of good counsel is that which setteth business strait. Bacon.

3. A merry frolicksome person.

You're a merry gamester,
My lord Sandys. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

4. A prostitute; not in use.

She's impudent, my lord,
And was a common gamester to the camp. Shakesp.

GA'MMER. n. s. [Of uncertain etymology; perhaps from grand mere, and therefore used commonly to old women.] The compellation of a woman corresponding to gaffer; as, Gammer Gurton's Needle. An old play.

GA'MMON. n. s. [gambone, Ital.]

1. The buttock of an hog salted and dried; the lower end of the flitch.

Ask for what price thy venal tongue was sold
A rusty gammon of some sev'n years old. Dryden.

Gammons, that give a relish to the taste,
And potted fowl, and fish, come in so fast,
That ere the first is out, the second stinks. Dryd.

2. A kind of play with dice.

The quick dice,
In thunder leaping from the box awake
The sounding gammon. Thomson's Autumn.

GA'MUT. n. s. [gama, Ital.] The scale of musical notes.

Madam, before you touch the instrument,
To learn the order of my fingering,
I must begin with rudiments of art,
To teach you gamut in a briefer sort. Shakesp.

When by the gamut some musicians make
A perfect song, others will undertake,
By the same gamut chang'd, to equal it:
Things simply good can never be unfit. Donne.

Long has a race of heroes fill'd the stage,
That rant by note, and through the gamut rage;
In songs and airs express their martial fire,
Combat in trills, and in a feuge expire. Addison.

'GAN, for began, from 'gin for begin.

The noble knight 'gan feel
His vital force to faint. Spenser.

To GANCH. v. a. [ganciare, from gancio a hook, Ital. ganche, Fr.] To drop from a high place upon hooks by way of punishment; a practice in Turkey, to which Smith alludes in his Pocockius.

To GA'NGRENATE. v. a. [from gangrene.] To produce a gangrene; to mortify.

Parts cauterised, gangrenated, siderated, and mortified, become black, the radical moisture or vital sulphur suffering an extinction. Brown. Vulg. Err.

GA'NGRENE. n. s. [gangrene, Fr. gangræna, Lat.] A mortification; a stoppage of circulation; followed by putrefaction.

This experiment may be transferred unto the cure of gangrenes, either coming of themselves, or induced by too much applying of opiates. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

She saves the lover, as we gangrenes stay,
By cutting hope, like a lopt limb, away. Waller.

A discolouring in the part was supposed an approach of a gangrene. Wiseman's Surgery.

If the substance of the soul is festered with these passions, the gangrene is gone too far to be ever cured: these inflammations will rage to all eternity. Addison's Spectator.

To GA'NGRENE. v. a. [gangrener, Fr. from the noun.] To corrupt to mortification.

In cold countries, when men's noses and ears are mortified, and, as it were, gangrened with cold, if they come to a fire they rot off presently; for that the few spirits that remain in those parts, are suddenly drawn forth, and so putrefaction is made complete. Bacon.

Gangren'd members must be lop'd away,
Before the nobler parts are tainted to decay. Dryd.

To GA'NGRENE. v. n. To become mortified.

Wounds immedicable
Rankle and fester, and gangrene
To black mortification. Milton's Agonistes.

As phlegmons are subject to mortification, so also in fat bodies they are apt to gangrene after opening, if that fat be not speedily digested out. Wiseman.

GA'NGRENOUS. adj. [from gangrene.] Mortified; producing or betokening mortification.

The blood, turning acrimonious, corrodes the vessels, producing hæmorrhages, pustules red, lead-coloured, black and gangrenous. Arbuth. on Alim.

GA'NTLET. } corrupted from gantelope, gant, all; and loopen to run, Dut.] A military punishment, in which the criminal running between the ranks receives a lash from each man.

But would'st thou friend, who hast two legs alone,
Would'st thou to run the gantlet these expose,
To a whole company of hob-nail'd shoes? Dryden.

Young gentlemen are driven with a whip, to run the gantlet through the several classes. Locke.

GA'NZA. n. s. [gansa, Span. a goose.] A kind of wild goose, by a flock of which a virtuoso was fabled to be carried to the lunar world.

They are but idle dreams and fancies,
And favour strongly of the ganza's. Hudibras.

GAOL. n. s. [geol, Welsh; geole, Fr.] A prison; a place of confinement. It is always pronounced and too often written jail, and sometimes goal.

Then am I the prisoner, and his bed my gaol.
Shakesp. King Lear.

Have I been ever free, and must my house
Be my retentive enemy, my gaol? Shakesp.

If we mean to thrive and do good, break open the gaols, and let out the prisoners. Shakesp.

To GAOL. v. a. [from the noun.] To imprison; to commit to gaol.

Gaoling vagabonds was chargeable, pesterous, and of no open example. Bacon.

GA'OLDELIVERY. n. s. [gaol and deliver.] The judicial process, which by condemnation or acquittal of persons confined evacuates the prison.

Then doth th' aspiring soul the body leave,
Which we call death; but were it known to all,
What life our souls do by this death receive,
Men would it birth of gaoldelivery call. Davies.

These make a general gaoldelivery of souls, not for punishment. Smith.

GA'OLER. n. s. [from gaol] Keeper of a prison; he to whose care the prisoners are committed.

This is a gentle provost; seldom, when
The steeled gaoler is the friend of men. Shakesp.

I know not how or why my surly gaoler,
Hard as his irons, and insolent as pow'r
When put in vulgar hands, Cleanthes,
Put off the brute. Dryden's Cleomenes.

From the polite part of mankind she had been banished and immured, til the death of her gaoler. Tatler.

GAP. n. s. [from gape.]

1. An opening in a broken fence.

Behold the despair,
By custom and covetous pates,
By gaps and opening of gates. Tusser's Husbandry

With terrours and with furies to the bounds
And crystal wall of heav'n; which, opening wide,
Roll'd inward, and a spacious gap disclos'd
Into the wasteful deep. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Bushes are most lasting of any for dead hedges, or to mend gaps. Mortimer's Husbandry.

I sought for a man, says God, that should make up the hedge, and stand in the gap before me, for the land that I should not destroy it. Rogers.

2. A breach.

The loss of that city concerned the Christian commonweal: manifold miseries afterwards ensued by the opening of that gap to all that side of Christendom. Knolles.

3. Any passage.

So stands the Thracian herdsman with his spear
Full in the gap, and hopes the hunted bear,
And hears him rustling in the wood. Dryden.

4. An avenue; an open way.

The former kings of England passed into them a great part of their prerogatives; which though then it was well intended, and perhaps well deserved, yet now such a gap of mischief lies open thereby, that I could wish it were well stopt. Spenser.

5. A hole; a deficiency.

If you violently proceed against him, mistaking his purpose, it would make a great gap in your honour. Shakesp. King Lear.

Nor is it any botch or gap in the works of nature. More.

6. Any interstice; a vacuity.

Each one demand, and answer to his part
Perform'd in his wide gap of time, since first
We were dissever'd. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

That I might sleep out this great gap of time my Antony is away. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleop.

To make 'twixt words and lines huge gaps
Wide as meridians in maps. Hudibras.

One can revive a languishing conversation by a sudden surprising sentence; another is more dexterous in seconding; a third can fill the gap with laughing. Swift.

7. An opening of the mouth in speech during the pronunciation of two successive vowels.

The hiatus, or gap between two words, is caused by two vowels opening on each other. Pope.

8. To stop a gap, is to escape by some mean shift; alluding to hedges mended with dead bushes, 'till the quicksets will grow.

His policy consists in setting traps,
In finding ways and means, and stopping gaps. Swift.

9. To stand in the gap. To make defence; to expose himself for the protection of something in danger.

What would become of the church if there were none more concerned for her rights than this? Who would stand in the gap? Lesley.

GAP-TOOTHED. adj. [gap and tooth.] Having interstices between the teetl..

The reeve, miller, and cook, are distinguished from each other, as much as the mincing lady prioress and the broad speaking gaptoothed wife of Bath. Dryden.

To GAPE. v. n. [geapan, Sax.]

1. To open the mouth wide; to yawn.

Some men there are love not a gaping pig;
Some, that are mad, if they behold a cat. Shakesp.

Gaping or yawning, and stretching, do pass from man to man; for that that causeth gaping and stretching is when the spirits are a little heavy by any vapour. Arbuthnot.

She stretches, gapes, unglues her eyes,
And asks if it be time to rise. Swift.

2. To open the mouth for food, as a young bird.

As callow birds,
Whose mother's kill'd in seeking of the prey,
Cry in their nest, and think her long away;
And at each leaf that stirs, each blast of wind,
Gape for the food which they must never find.
Dryden.

As in a drought the thirsty creatures cry,
And gape upon the gather'd clouds for rain,
Then first the martlet meets it in the sky,
And with wet wings joys all the feather'd train.
Dryden.

3. To desire earnestly; to crave: with for.

To her grim death appears in all her shapes;
The hungry grave for her due tribute gapes. Denh.
To thy fortune be not thou a slave;
For what hast thou to fear beyond the grave?
And thou who gap'st for my estate, draw near;
For I would whisper somewhat in thy ear. Dryden.

4. With after.

What shall we say of those who spend their days in gaping after court favour and preferments?
L'Estrange.

5. With at.

Many have gaped at the church revenues; but, before they could swallow them, have had their mouth stopped in the church-yard. South.

6. To open in fissures or holes.

If it assume my noble father's person,
I'll speak to it, though hell itself should gape,
And bid me hold my peace. Shakesp. Hamlet.
May that ground gape, and swallow me alive,
Where I shall kneel to him that slew my father.
Shakesp.

The great horse-mussel, with the fine shell, doth gape and shut as the oysters do. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

The reception of one is as different from the admission of the other, as when the earth falls open under the incisions of the plough, and when it gapes and greedily opens itself to drink in the dew of heaven, or the refreshments of a shower. South.

The mouth of a little artery and nerve gapes into the cavity of these vesicles. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.

7. To open with a breach.

The planks, their pitchy coverings wash'd away,
Now yield, and now a yawning breach display:
The roaring waters, with a hostile tide,
Rush through the ruins of her gaping side. Dryd.

That all these actions can be performed by aliment, as well as medicines, is plain; by observing the effects of different substances upon the fluids and solids, when the vessels are open and gape by a wound. Arbuthnot.

8. To open; to have an hiatus.

There is not, to the best of my remembrance, one vowel gaping on another for want of a cæsura in this poem. Dryden.

9. To make a noise with open throat.

And, if my muse can through past ages see,
That noisy, nauseous, gaping fool is he. Roscomm.

2. One who stares foolishly.
3. One who longs or craves.

The golden shower of the dissolved abbey-lands rained well near into every gaper's mouth. Carew.

GAR, in Sax. signifies a weapon; so Eadgar is a happy weapon; Ethelgar a noble weapon. Gibson's Camden.

To GAR. v. a. [giera, Islandick.] To cause; to make. Obsolete. It is still used in Scotland.

Tell me, good Hobbinol, what gars thee greet?
What! hath some wolf thy tender lambs ytorn?
Or is thy bagpipe broke, that sounds so sweet?
Or art thou of thy loved lass forlorne? Spenser.

GARB. n. s. [garbe, Fr.]

1. Dress; clothes; habit.

Thus Belial, with words cloth'd in reason's garb,
Counsel'd ignoble ease and peaceful sloth. Milton.
He puts himself into the garb and habit of a professor of physick, and sets up. L'Estrange.

2. Fashion of dress.

Horace's wit, and Virgil's state,
He did not steal, but emulate;
And when he would like them appear,
Their garb, but not their clothes, did wear.
Denham.

3. Exteriour appearance.

This is some fellow,
Who, having been prais'd for bluntness, doth affect
A saucy roughness, and constrains the garb
Quite from his nature. Shakesp. King Lear.

GA'RBAGE. n. s. [garbear, Span. This etymology is very doubtful.] The bowels; the offal; that part of the inwards which is separated and thrown away.

The cloyed will,
That satiate, yet unsatisfy'd desire, that tub
Both fill'd and running, ravening first the lamb,
Longs after for the garbage. Shakesp. Cymbeline.
Lust, though to a radiant angel link'd,
Will sate itself in a celestial bed,
And prey on garbage. Shakesp. Hamlet.
A flam more senseless than the rog'ry
Of old Aruspicy and aug'ry,
That out of garbages of cattle
Presag'd th' events of truce or battle. Hudibras.
Who, without aversion, ever look'd
On holy garbage, though by Homer cook'd? Rosc.
When you receive condign punishment, you run to your confessor, that parcel of guts and garbage.
Dryden.

GA'RBEL. n. s. A plant next the keel of a ship. Bailey.

GA'RBIDGE. n. s. Corrupted from garbage.

All shavings of horns, hoofs of cattle, blood, and garbidge, is good manure for land. Mortimer.

GA'RDEN. n. s. [gardd, Welsh; jardin, Fr. giardino, Ital.]

1. A piece of ground inclosed, and cultivated with extraordinary care, planted with herbs or fruits for food, or laid out for pleasure.

Thy promises are like Adonis' gardens,
Which one day bloom'd, and fruitful were the next.
Shakespeare.

My lord of Ely, when I was last in Holbourn,
I saw good strawberries in your garden there. Shak.
In the royal ordering of gardens, there ought to be gardens for all the months in the year. Bacon.
In every garden should be provided flowers, fruit, shade, and water. Temple.
My garden takes up half my daily care,
And my field asks the minutes I can spare. Harte.

2. A place particularly fruitful or delightful.

I am arriv'd from fruitful Lombardy,
The pleasant garden of great Italy. Shakesp.

3. Garden is often used in composition for hortensis, or belonging to a garden.

4. Garden-mould. Mould fit for a garden.

They delight most in rich black garden-mould, that is deep and light, and mixed rather with sand than clay. Mortimer.

5. Garden-tillage. Tillage used in cultivating gardens.

Peas and beans are what belong to garden-tillage as well as that of the field. Mortimer's Husband.

6. Garden-ware. The produce of gardens.

A clay bottom is a much more pernicious soil for trees and garden-ware than gravel. Mortimer.

To GA'RDEN. v. n. [from the noun.] To cultivate a garden; to lay out gardens.

At first, in Rome's poor age,
When both her kings and consuls held the plough,
Or garden'd well Ben Jonson's Catiline.
When ages grow to civility and elegancy, men come to build stately sooner than to garden finely; as if gardening were the greater perfection. Bacon.

GA'RDENER. n. s. [from garden.] He that attends or cultivates gardens.

Our bodies are our gardens, to the which our wills are gardeners; so that, if we plant nettles, or sow lettuce, the power lies in our will. Shakesp.
Gardeners tread down any loose ground, after they have sown onions or turnips. Bacon's N. Hist.
The gardener may lop religion as he pleases.
Howel.

The life and felicity of an excellent gardener is preferable to all other diversions. Evelyn's Kalend.
Then let the learned gard'ner mark with care
The kinds of stocks, and what will bear. Dryden.

GA'RDENING. n. s. [from garden.] The act of cultivating or planning gardens.

My compositions in gardening are after the Pindarick manner, and run into the beautiful wildness of nature, without affecting the nicer elegancies of art. Spectator.

GARE. n. s. Coarse wool growing on the legs of sheep. Dict.

GA'RGARISM. n. s. [γαργαρισμος; gargarisme, Fr.] A liquid form of medicine to wash the mouth with. Quincy.

GA'RLAND. n. s. [garlande, guirland, Fr.]

1. A wreath of branches or flowers.

Strephon, with heavy twigs of laurel-tree,
A garland made, on temples for to wear;
For he then chosen was the dignity
Of village-lord that Whitsuntide to bear. Sidney.

A reeling world will never stand upright,
'Till Richard wear the garland of the realm.
—How! wear the garland! do'st thou mean the crown?
—Ay, my good lord. Shakesp. Rich. III.

Then party-colour'd flow'rs of white and red
She wove, to make a garland for her head. Dryd.

Vanquish again; though she be gone,
Whose garland crown'd the victor's hair,
And reign; though she has left the throne,
Who made thy glory worth thy care. Prior.

Her gods and godlike heroes rise to view,
And all her faded garlands bloom anew. Pope.

2. The top; the principal; the thing most prized.

With every minute you do change a mind,
And call him noble that was now your hate,
Him vile, that was your garland. Shakesp.

GA'RLICK. n. s. [ȝar, Sax. a lance; and leek, the [illegible] that shoots up in blades. Skinner. Allium, Lat.]

It has a bulbous root, consisting of many small tubercles included in its coats: [illegible] are plain, the flowers consist of six leaves, [illegible] into a corymbus on the top of the stalk; and are succeeded by subrotund fruit, divided into three cells, which contain roundish seeds. Miller.

Garlick is of an extremely strong smell, and of an acid and pungent taste. It is extremely active, as may be proved by applying plasters of garlick to the feet, which will give a strong smell to the breath. Hill.

Garlick has, of all our plants, the greatest strength, affords most nourishment, and supplies most spirits to those who eat little flesh Temple.

'Tis mortal sin an onion to devour;
Each clove of garlick is a sacred pow'r:
Religious nations sure, and bleat abodes,
Where ev'ry orchard is o'er-run with gods. Tate.

GA'RLICK Pear-tree. n. s.

This tree is pretty common in Jamaica, and several other places of America, where it usually rises to the height of thirty or forty feet, and spreads into many branches. When the flowers fall off the pointal, it becomes a round fruit, which, when ripe, has a rough, brownish rind, and a mealy sweet pulp, but a strong scent of garlick. Miller.

GA'RLICK Wild. n. s. A plant.

GA'RLICKEATER. n. s. [garlick and eat.] A mean fellow.

You've made good work,
You and your apron men, that stood so much

The breath of garlickeaters. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

GA'RMENT. n. s. [guarniment, old Fr.] Any thing by which the body is covered; clothes; dress.

Hence, rotten thing, or I shall shake thy bones
Out of thy garments. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

Our leaf, once fallen, springeth no more; neither doth the sun or summer adorn us again with the garments of new leaves and flowers. Ral. Hist.

Fairest thing that shines below,
Why in this robe dost thou appear?
Would'st thou a white more perfect show,
Thou must at all no garment wear. Cowley.

Three worthy persons from his side it tore,
And dy'd his garment with their scatter'd gore.
Waller.

The peacock, in all his pride, does not display half the colours that appear in the garments of a British lady, when she is dressed. Addison's Spect.

Let him that sues for the coat, i. e. the shirt, or inner garment, take the cloak also, is a proverbial phrase too; for in the truth of the letter, a shirt is no likely matter of a lawsuit, and signifies an uncontesting sufferance of such small losses. Kettlewell.

GA'RNER. n. s. [grenier, Fr.] A place in which threshed grain is stored up.

Earth's increase, and foyson plenty,
Barns and garners never empty. Shakesp.

For sundry foes the rural realm surround;
The fieldmouse builds her garner under ground;
For gather'd grain the blind laborious mole,
In winding mazes, works her hidden hole. Dryd.

To GA'RNER v. a. [from the noun.] To store as in garners.

There, where I have garner'd up my heart,
Where either I must live, or bear no life. Shakesp.

GA'RNET. n. s. [garnato, Ital. granatus, low Lat. from its resemblance in colour to the grain of the pomegranate.]

The garnet is a gem of a middle degree of hardness, between the sapphire and the common crystal. It is found of various sizes. Its surfaces are not so smooth or polite as those of a ruby, and its colour is ever of a strong red, with a plain admixture of blueish: its degree of colour is very different, and it always wants much of the brightness of the ruby. Hill.

The garnet seems to be a species of the carbuncle of the ancients: the Bohemian is red, with a slight cast of a flame colour; and the Syrian is red, with a slight cast of purple. Woodward's Met. Foss.

To GA'RNISH. v. a. [garnir, Fr.]

1. To decorate with ornamental appendages.

There were hills which garnished their proud

GA'RNITURE. n. s. [from garnish.] Furniture; ornament.

They conclude, if they fall short in garniture of their knees, that they are inferiour in furniture of their heads. Gov. of the Tongue.

Plain sense, which pleased your sires an age ago,
Is lost without the garniture of show. Granville.

As nature has poured out her charms upon the female part of our species, so they are very assiduous in bestowing upon themselves the finest garnitures of art. Addison's Spect.

GA'ROUS. adj. [from garum.] Resembling pickle made of fish.

In a civet cat an offensive odour proceeds, partly from its food, that being especially fish; whereof this humour may be a garous excretion, and olidous separation. Brown.

GA'RRAN. n. s. [Erse. It imports the same as gelding. The word is still retained in Scotland.] A small horse; a hobby. A highland horse, which, when brought into the north of England, takes the name of *gallowa*y.

When he comes forth, he will make their cows and garrans to walk, if he doth no other harm to their persons. Spenser.

Every man would be forced to provide winter-fodder for his team, whereas common garrans shift upon grass the year round; and this would force men to the enclosing of grounds, so that the race of garrans would decrease. Temple.

GA'RRET. n. s. [garite, the tower of a citadel, Fr.]

1. A room on the highest floor of the house.

The mob, commission'd by the government,
Are seldom to an empty garret sent. Dryden.

John Bull skipped from room to room; ran up stairs and down stairs, from the kitchen to the garret. Arbuthnot's John Bull.

On earth the god of wealth was made
Sole patron of the building trade;
Leaving the arts the spacious air,
With licence to build castles there:
And 'tis conceiv'd their old pretence,
To lodge in garrets, comes from thence. Swift.

2. Rotten wood. Not in use.

The colour of the shining part of rotten wood, by daylight, is in some pieces white, and in some pieces inclining to red, which they call the white and red garret. Bacon.

GARRETE'ER n. s. [from garret.] An inhabitant of a garret.

GA'RRISON. n. s. [garrison, Fr.]

1. Soldiers placed in a fortified town or castle to defend it.

How oft he said to me,
Thou art no soldier fit for Cupid's garrison. Sidney.

2. Fortified place stored with soldiers.

Whom the old Roman wall so ill confin'd,
With a new chain of garrisons you bind. Waller

3. The state of being placed in a fortification for its defence.
Some of them that are laid in garrison will do no great hurt to the enemies. Spenser on Ireland.

To GA'RRISON. v. a. [from the noun.] To secure by fortresses.
Others those forces join,
Which garrison the conquests near the Rhine.
Dryden's Juvenal.

GARRU'LITY. n. s. [garrulitas, Lat.]
1. Loquacity; incontinence of tongue; inability to keep a secret.
Let me here
Expiate, if possible, my crime,
Shameful garrulity. Milton's Agonistes.
2. The quality of talking too much; talkativeness.
Some vices of speech must carefully be avoided; first of all, loquacity or garrulity. Ray on the Creat.

GA'RRULOUS. adj. [garrulus, Latin.] Prattling; talkative.
Old age looks out,
And garrulous recounts the feats of youth. Thoms.

GA'RTER. n. s. [gurdus, Welsh; jartier, Fr. from gar, Welsh, the binding of the knee.]
1. A string or ribband by which the stocking is held upon the leg.
Let their heads be sleekly comb'd, their blue coats brush'd, and their garters of an indifferent knit. Shakesp. Taming of the Shrew.
When we rest in our clothes we loosen our garters, and other ligatures, to give the spirits free passage. Ray.
Handsome garters at your knees. Swift.
There lay three garters, half a pair of gloves,
And all the trophies of his former loves. Pope.
2. The mark of the order of the garter, the highest order of English knighthood.
Now by my george, my garter.
—The george, profan'd, hath lost his holy honour,
The garter, blemish'd, pawn'd his knightly virtue.
Shakesp. Rich. III.
You owe your Ormond nothing but a son,
To fill in future times his father's place,
And wear the garter of his mother's race. Dryden.
3. The principal king at arms.

To GA'RTER. v. a. [from the noun.] To bind with a garter.
He, being in love, could not see to garter his hose. Shakesp.

GARTH. n. s. [as if girth, from gird.] The bulk of the body measured by the girdle.

GAS. n. s. [A word invented by the chymists.] It is used by Van Helmont, and seems designed to signify, in general, a spirit not capable of being coagulated; but he uses it loosely in many senses.
Harris.

GASCONADE. n. s. [Fr. from Gascon, a nation eminent for boasting.] A boast; a bravado.
Was it a gasconade to please me, that you said your fortune was increased to one hundred a-year since I left you? Swift.

To GASCONADE. v. n [from the noun.] To boast; to brag; to bluster.

To GASH. v. a. [from hacher, to cut, Fr. Skinner.] To cut deep so as to make a gaping wound; to cut with a blunt instrument so as to make the wound wide.
Where the Englishmen at arms had been defeated, many of their horses were found grievously gashed or gored to death. Hayward.
Wit is a keen instrument, and every one can cut and gash with it but to carve a beautiful image requires art. Tillotson.
See me gash'd with knives,
Or sear'd with burning steel. Rowe's Royal Conv.
Streaming with blood, all over gash'd with wounds,
He reel'd, he groan'd, and at the altar fell. Philips.

GASH. n. s. [from the verb.]
1. A deep and wide wound.
He glancing on his helmet, made a large
And open gash therein; were not his targe,
That broke the violence of his intent,
The weary soul from thence it would discharge.
Spenser.
A perilous gash, a very limb lopt off. Shakesp.
Hamilton drove Newton almost to the end of the lists: but Newton on a sudden gave him such a gash on the leg, that therewith he fell to the ground. Hayward.
But th' ethereal substance clos'd,
Not long divisible; and from the gash
A stream of nectareous humour issuing flow'd.
Milton.
2. The mark of a wound. I know not if this be proper.
I was fond of back-sword and cudgel play, and I now bear in my body many a black and blue gash and scar. Arbuthnot.

GA'SKINS. n. s. [from Gascoigne. See GALLIGASKINS.] Wide hose; wide breeches. An old ludicrous word.
If one point break, the other will hold;
Or, if both break, your gaskins fall. Shakesp.

To GASP. v. n. [from gape, Skinner; from gispe, Dan. to sob, Junius.]
1. To open the mouth wide; to catch breath with labour.
The sick for air before the portal gasp. Dryden.
They rais'd a feeble cry with trembling notes;
But the weak voice deceiv'd their gasping throats.
Dryden.
The gasping head flies off; a purple flood
Flows from the trunk. Dryden's Æneid.
The ladies gasp'd, and scarcely could respire;
The breath they drew no longer air, but fire. Dry.
A scantling of wit lay gasping for life, and groaning beneath a heap of rubbish. Dryden.
The rich countrymen in Austria were faint and gasping for breath. Brown's Travels.
Pale and faint,
He gasps for breath; and, as his life flows from him,
Demands to see his friends. Addison's Cato.
2. To emit breath by opening the mouth convulsively.
I lay me down to gasp my latest breath;
The wolves will get a breakfast by my death. Dry
He staggers round, his eyeballs roll in death,
And with short sobs he gasps away his breath.
Dryden's Æn.
3. To long for. This sense is, I think, not proper, as nature never expresses desire by gasping.
The Castilian and his wife had the comfort to be under the same master, who, seeing how dearly they loved one another, and gasped after their liberty, demanded a most exorbitant price for their ransom. Spectator.

GASP. n. s. [from the verb.]
1. The act of opening the mouth to catch breath.
2. The short catch of breath in the last agonies.
His fortunes all lie speechless, and his name
Is at last gasp. Shakesp. Cymbeline.
Ah, Warwick, Montague hath breath'd his last;
And to the latest gasp cry'd out for Warwick. Shak.
If in the dreadful hour of death,
If at the latest gasp of breath,
When the cold damp bedews your brow,
You hope for mercy, shew it now. Addison.

To GAST. v. a. [from ȝæſt, Saxon. See AGHAST.] To make aghast; to fright; to shock; to terrify; to fear; to affray.
When he saw my best alarmed spirits
Bold in the quarrel's right, rous'd to th' encounter,
Or whether gasted by the noise I made,
Full suddenly he fled. Shakesp. King Lear.

GA'STRICK. adj. [from γαστηρ.] Belonging to the belly.

GASTRO'RAPHY. n. s. [γαστηρ and ῥάπτω.] In strictness of etymology signifies no more than sewing up any wound of the belly; yet in common acceptation it implies, that the wound of the belly is complicated with another of the intestines. Sharp's Surgery.

GASTRO'TOMY. n. s. [γαστηρ and τίτομα.] The act of cutting open the belly.

GAT. The preterite of get.
Moses gat him up into the mount. Ex. xxiv. 18.

GATE. n. s. [ȝeat, Sax.]
1. The door of a city, castle, palace, or large building.
Open the gate of mercy, gracious God!
My soul flies through these wounds to seek thee.
Shakesp.
Gates of monarchs
Are arch'd so high, that giants may jet through,
And keep their impious turbands on, without
Good-morrow to the sun. Shakesp. Cymbel
2. A frame of timber upon hinges to give a passage into enclosed grounds.
Know'st thou the way to Dover?
—Both stile and gate, horseway, and footpath.
Shakesp.
3. An avenue; an opening.
Auria had done nothing but wisely and politicly, in setting the Venetians together by the ears with the Turks, and opening a gate for a long war. Knolles.

GA'TEVEIN. n. s. The vena porta.
Being a king that loved wealth, he could not endure to have trade sick, nor any obstruction to continue in the gatevein which disperseth that blood.
Bacon's Henry VII

GA'TEWAY. n. s. [gate and way.] A way through gates of enclosed grounds.
Gateways between inclosures are so miry, that they cannot cart between one field and another.
Mortimer's Husbandry.

1. To collect; to bring into one place.
Gather stones—and they took stones and made an heap. Gen.
2. To get in harvest.
The seventh year we shall not sow, nor gather in our increase. Lev. xxv. 20
3. To pick up; to glean.
His opinions
Have satisfied the king for his di[vorce],
Gather'd from all the famous [illegible] Shakesp.
Cast up the highway, gather out the [stones]. Is. lxii. 10.
I will spend this preface upon those from whom I have [illegible] knowledge; for I am but a gat[herer]. Wotton.
To pay the creditor, that lent him his rent, he must gather up money by degrees. Locke.
4. To crop; to pluck.
What have I done?
To see my youth, my beauty, and my love
No sooner gain'd, but slighted and betray'd;
And like a rose just gather'd from the stalk,
But only smelt, and cheaply thrown aside,
To wither on the ground! Dryden's Span. Fryar.
5. To assemble.
They have gathered themselves together against me. Job.
All the way we went there were gathered some people on both sides, standing in a row. Bacon.
6. To heap up; to accumulate.
He that by usury and unjust gain increaseth his substance, shall gather it for him that will pity the poor. Proverbs.
7. To select and take.

Save, us, O Lord, and gather us from among the heathen, to give thanks unto thy holy name. Ps. cvi. 47.

8. To sweep together.

The kingdom of heaven is like unto a net that was cast into the sea, and gathered of every kind. Mat. xiii. 47.

9. To collect charitable contributions.

10. To bring into one body or interest.

I will gather others to him, besides those that are gathered unto him. Is lvi. 8.

11. To draw together from a state of diffusion; to compress; to contract.

Immortal Tully shone,
The Roman rostra deck'd the consul's throne;
Gath'ring his flowing robe he seem'd to stand,
In act to speak, and graceful stretch'd his hand. Pope.

12. To gain.

He gathers ground upon her in the chace;
Now breathes upon her hair with nearer pace. Dry.

13. To pucker needlework.

14. To collect logically; to know by inference.

That which, out of the law of reason or of God, men probably gathering to be expedient, they make it law. Hooker.

The reason that I gather he is mad,
Is a mad tale he told to-day at dinner,
Of his own door being shut against his entrance. Sh.

After he had seen the vision, we endeavoured to get into Macedonia, assuredly gathering that the Lord had called us. Acts.

From this doctrine of the increasing and lessening of sin in this respect, we may gather, that all sins are not alike and equal, as the stoicks of ancient times, and their followers, have falsely imagined. Perkins.

Return'd
By night, and listening where the hapless pair
Sat in their sad discourse, and various plaint,
Thence gather'd his own doom. Milton's Par. Lost.

Madamoiselle de Scudery, who is as old as Sibyl, is translating Chaucer into French: from which I gather that he has formerly been translated into the old Provencal. Dryden.

15. To draw together in needlework.

16. To gather breath. [A proverbial expression.] To have respite from any calamity.

The luckless lucky maid
A long time with that savage people staid,
To gather breath, in many miseries. Spenser.

To GA'THER. v. n.

1. To be condensed; to thicken.

If ere night the gath'ring clouds we fear,
A song will help the beating storm to bear. Dryd.

When gath'ring clouds o'ershadow all the skies,
And shoot quick lightnings, weigh, my boys! he cries. Dryden.

When the rival winds their quarrel try,
South, East, West, on airy coursers born,
The whirlwind gathers, and the woods are torn. Dryden.

Think on the storm that gathers o'er your head,
And threatens every hour to burst upon it. Addison.

2. To grow larger by the accretion of similar matter.

Their snow-ball did not gather as it went; for the people came in to them. Bacon's Henry VII.

3. To assemble.

There be three things that mine heart feareth; the slander of a city, the gathering together of an unruly multitude, and a false accusation Ec. xxvi 5.

4. To generate pus or matter.

Ask one, who by repeated restraints hath subdued his natural rage, how he likes the change, and he will tell you 'tis no less happy than the case of a broken imposthume after the painful gathering and filling of it. Decay of Piety.

GA'THER. n. s. [from the verb.] Pucker; cloth drawn together in wrinkles.

Give laws for pantaloons,
The length of breeches, and the gathers,
Part cannons, perriwigs, and feathers. Hudibras.

GA'THERER. n. s. [from gather.]

1. One that gathers; one that collects; a collector.

I will spend this preface about those from whom I have gathered my knowledge; for I am but a gatherer and disposer of other men's stuff. Wotton.

2. One that gets in a crop of any kind.

I was a herdman and a gatherer of sycamore fruit. Amos.

Nor in that land
Do poisonous herbs deceive the gatherer's hand. May's Virgil.

Let every one lay by him in store, that there be no gathering when I come. 1 Cor. xvi. 2.

GA'TTEN-TREE. n. s. A species of Cornelian cherry.

GAUDE. n. s. [The etymology of this word is uncertain; Skinner imagines it may come from gaude, Fr. a yellow flower, yellow being the most gaudy colour. Junius, according to his custom, talks of ἀγαυος; and Mr. Lye finds gaude, in Douglass, to signify deceit or fraud, from gwawdio, Welsh, to cheat. It seems to me most easily deducible from gaudium, Lat. joy; the cause of joy; a token of joy: thence aptly applied to any thing that gives or expresses pleasure. In Scotland this word is still retained, both as a showy bawble, and the person fooled. It also in Scotland denotes a yellow flower.] An ornament; a fine thing; any thing worn as a sign of joy. It is not now much used.

He stole th' impression of her fantasy,
With bracelets of thy hair, rings, gaudes, conceits,
Knacks, trifles, nosegays, sweetmeats. Shakesp.

The sun is in the heav'n, and the proud day,
Attended with the pleasures of the world,
Is all too wanton, and too full of gaudes,
To give me audience. Shakesp. King Lear.

My love to Hermia
Is melted as the snow; seems to me now
As the remembrance of an idle gaude,
Which in my childhood I did doat upon. Shakesp.

Some bound for Guiney, golden sand to find,
Bore all the gaudes the simple natives wear;
Some for the pride of Turkish courts design'd,
For folded turbants finest Holland bear. Dryden.

To GAUDE. v. a. [gaudeo, Lat.] To exult; to rejoice at any thing.

Go to a gossip's feast, and gaude with me,
After so long grief such nativity. Shakesp.

GA'UDERY. n. s. [from gaude.] Finery; ostentatious luxury of dress.

The triumph was not pageants and gaudery, but one of the wisest and noblest institutions that ever was. Bacon's Essays.

Age, which is but one remove from death, and should have nothing about us but what looks like a decent preparation for it, scarce ever appears, of late, but in the high mode, the flaunting garb, and utmost gaudery of youth, with clothes as ridiculously, and as much in the fashion, as the person that wears them is usually grown out of it. South.

A plain suit, since we can make but one,
Is better than to be by tarnish'd gaud'ry known. Dryden.

GA'UDILY. adv. [from gaudy.] Showily.

GA'UDINESS. n. s. [from gaudy.] Showiness; tinsel appearance.

GA'UDY. adj. [from gaude.] Showy; splendid; pompous; ostentatiously fine.

Costly thy habit as thy purse can buy,
But not exprest in fancy; rich, not gaudy;
For the apparel oft proclaims the man. Shakesp.

Fancies fond with gaudy shapes possess,
As thick and numberless
As the gay motes that people the sun-beams. Milt.

A goldfinch there I saw, with gaudy pride
Of painted plumes, that hopp'd from side to side. Dryden.

The Bavarian duke his brigades leads,
Gallant in arms, and gaudy to behold. Philips.

A man who walks directly to his journey's end, will arrive thither much sooner than him who wanders aside to gaze at every thing, or to gather every gaudy flower. Watts.

It is much to be lamented, that persons so naturally qualified to be great examples of piety, should, by an erroneous education, be made poor and gaudy spectacles of the greatest vanity. Law.

GA'UDY. n. s. [gaudium, Lat.] A feast; a festival; a day of plenty. A word used in the university.

He may surely be content with a fast to-day, that is sure of a gaudy to-morrow. Cheyne.

GAVE. The preterit of give.

Thou can'st not every day give me thy heart;
If thou can'st give it, then thou never gav'st it:
Love's riddles are, that though thy heart depart,
It stays at home, and thou with losing sav'st it. Donne.

GA'VEL. n. s. A provincial word for ground.

Let it lie upon the ground or gavel eight or ten times. Mortimer.

GA'VELKIND. n. s. [In law.] A custom whereby the lands of the fathers are equally divided at his death amongst all his sons, or the land of the brother equally divided among the brothers, if he have no issue of his own. This custom is of force in divers places of England, but especially in Kent. Cowell.

Among other Welsh customs he abolished that of gavelkind, whereby the heirs female were utterly excluded, and the bastards did inherit as well as the legitimate, which is the very Irish gavelkind. Davies on Ireland.

To GAUGE. v. a. [gauge, jauge, a measuring rod, Fr. It is pronounced, and often written, gage.]

1. To measure with respect to the contents of a vessel.

2. To measure with respect to any proportion.

The vanes nicely gauged on each side, broad on one side, and narrow on the other, both which minister to the progressive motion of the bird. Derham's Physico-Theology.

There is nothing more perfectly admirable in itself than that artful manner in Homer, of taking measure or gaging his heroes by each other, and thereby elevating the character of one person by the opposition of it to some other he is made to excel. Pope.

GAUGE. n. s. [from the verb.] A measure; a standard.

This plate must be a gage to file your worm and groove to equal breadth by. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

If money were to be hired, as land is, or to be had from the owner himself, it might then be had at the market rate, which would be a constant gauge of your trade and wealth. Locke.

Timothy proposed to his mistress that she should entertain no servant that was above four feet seven inches high; and for that purpose had prepared a gage, by which they were to be measured. Arbuthnot.

GAU'GER. n. s. [from gauge.] One whose business is to measure vessels or quantities.

Those earls and dukes have been privileged with royal jurisdiction; and appointed their special officers, as sheriff, admiral, gauger, and escheator. Carew on Cornwall.

Those earls and dukes have been privileged with royal jurisdiction; and appointed their special officers, as sheriff, admiral, gauger, and escheator. Carew on Cornwall.

GAUNT. adj. [As if gewant, from ȝepanian, to lessen, Sax.] Thin; slender; lean; meagre.

Oh, how that name befits my composition!
Old Gaunt, indeed, and gaunt in being old:
Within me grief hath kept a tedious fast;
And who abstains from meat that is not gaunt?
For sleeping England long time have I watch'd;
Watching breeds leanness, leanness is all gaunt:
The pleasure that some fathers feed upon
Is my strict fast; I mean my children's looks;
And therein fasting, thou hast made me gaunt:
Gaunt am I for the grave, gaunt as a grave,
Whose hollow womb inherits nought but bones.
Shakesp. Richard II.

Two mastiffs, gaunt and grim, her flight pursu'd,
And oft their fasten'd fangs in blood embru'd. Dry.

GA'UNTLY. adv. [from gaunt.] Leanly; slenderly; meagerly.

GA'UNTLET. n. s. [gantelet, Fr.] An iron glove used for defence, and thrown down in challenges. It is sometimes in poetry used for the cestus, or boxing glove.

A scaly gauntlet now, with joints of steel,
Must glove this hand. Shakesp. Henry IV.

Feel but the difference, soft and rough;
This a gauntlet, that a muff. Cleaveland.

Some shall in swiftness for the goal contend,
And others try the twanging bow to bend;
The strong with iron gauntlets arm'd shall stand,
Oppos'd in combat on the yellow sand. Dryden.

Who naked wrestled best, besmear'd with oil;
Or who with gauntlets gave or took the foil. Dryd.

The funeral of some valiant knight
May give this thing its proper light;
View his two gauntlets; these declare
That both his hands were us'd to war. Prior.

So to repel the Vandals of the stage,
Our vet'ran bard resumes his tragick rage;
He throws the gauntlet Otway used to wield,
And calls for Englishmen to judge the field.
Southern.

GA'VOT. n.s. [gavotte, Fr.] A kind of dance.

To GAZE. v. n. [ἀγάζεσθαι, or rather ȝeȝrean, to see, Sax.] To look intently and earnestly; to look with eagerness.

What see'st thou there? King Henry's diadem,
Inchas'd with all the honours of the world:
If so, gaze on. Shakesp. Henry IV.

From some she cast her modest eyes below;
At some her gazing glances roving flew. Fairfax

Gaze not on a maid, that thou fall not by those things that are precious in her. Eccles. ix. 5.

A lover's eyes will gaze an eagle blind. Shakesp.

High stations tumults, but not bliss, create;
None think the great unhappy, but the great:
Fools gaze and envy; Envy darts a sting,
Which makes a swain as wretched as a king. Young.

To GAZE. v. a. To view stedfastly.

Strait toward heav'n my wondring eyes I turn'd,
And gaz'd awhile the ample sky. Milton.

GAZE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Intent regard: look of eagerness and wonder; fixed look.

Being lighten'd with her beauty's beam,
And thereby fill'd with happy influence,
And lifted up above the world's gaze,
To sing with angels her immortal praise. Spenser.

Do but note a wild and wanton herd,
If any air of musick touch their ears,
You shall perceive them make a mutual staud,
Their savage eyes turn'd to a modest gaze,
By the sweet power of musick. Shakesp.

Not a month
'Fore your queen dy'd, she was more worth such gazes
Than what you look on now. Shakesp.

With secret gaze,
Or open admiration, him behold,
On whom the great Creator hath bestow'd
Worlds. Milton's Par. Lost.

Pindar is a dark writer, wants connexion as to our understanding, soars out of sight, and leaves his readers at a gaze. Dryden.

After having stood at gaze before this gate, he discovered an inscription. Addison's Freeholder.

2. The object gazed on.

I must die
Betray'd, captiv'd, and both my eyes put out;
Made of mine enemies the scorn and gaze;

1. Convex; protuberant; swelling into inequalities.

The bones will rise, and make a gibbous member. Wiseman.

A pointed flinty rock, all bare and black,
Grew gibbous from behind the mountain's back. Dryden.

The sea, by this access and recess, shuffling the empty shells, wears them away, reducing those that are concave and gibbous to a flat. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

2. Crookbacked.

I demand how the camels of Bactria came to have two bunches in their back, whereas the camels of Arabia have but one? How oxen in some countries began and continue gibbous or bunch-backed? Brown.

GI'BBOUSNESS. n. s. [from gibbous.] Convexity; prominence.

To make the convexity of the earth discernible, suppose a man lifted in the air, that he may have a spacious horizon; but then, because of the distance, the convexity and gibbousness would vanish away, and he would only see a great circular flat. Bentley's Sermons.

GI'BCAT. n. s. [gib and cat.] An old worn-out cat.

I am as melancholy as a gibcat, or a lugg'd bear. Shakesp.

To GIBE. v. n. [gaber, old Fr. to sneer, to ridicule.] To sneer; to join censoriousness with contempt.

They seem to imagine that we have erected of late a frame of some new religion, the furniture whereof we should not have borrowed from our enemies, lest they should afterwards laugh and gibe at our party. Hooker.

When he saw her toy, and gibe, and geer,
And pass the bounds of modest merry make,
Her dalliance he despis'd. Spenser.

Why that's the way to choke a gibing spirit,
Whose influence is begot of that loose grace
Which shallow laughing hearers give to fools. Shak.

Thus with talents well endu'd,
To be scurrilous and rude,
When you pertly raise your snout,
Fleer and gibe, and laugh and flout. Swift.

To GIBE v. a. To reproach by contemptuous hints; to flout; to scoff; to ridicule; to treat with scorn; to sneer; to taunt.

When rioting in Alexandria, you
Did pocket up my letters, and with taunts
Did gibe my missive out of audience. Shakesp.

Draw the beasts as I describe them,
From their features while I gibe them. Swift.

GIBE. n. s. [from the verb.] Sneer; hint of contempt by word or look; scoff; act or expression of scorn; taunt.

Mark the fleers, the gibes, and notable scorns
That dwell in ev'ry region of his face. Shakesp.

The rich have still a gibe in store,
And will be monstrous witty on the poor. Dryden.

If they would hate from the bottom of their hearts, their aversion would be too strong for little gibes every moment. Spectator.

But the dean, if this secret should come to his ears,
Will never have done with his gibes and his jeers. Swift.

GI'BER. n. s. [from gibe.] A sneerer; one who turns others to ridicule by contemptuous hints; a scoffer; a taunter.

You are well understood to be a more perfect giber of the table, than a necessary bencher of the capitol. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

He is a giber, and our present business
Is of more serious consequence. Ben Jonson.

GI'BINGLY. adv. [from gibe.] Scornfully; contemptuously.

His present portance
Gibingly and ungravely he did fashion
After th' inveterate hate he bears to you. Shakesp.

GI'BLETS. n. s. [according to Minshew from gobbet, gobblet: according to Junius, more properly from gibier, game, Fr.] The parts of a goose which are cut off before it is roasted.

'Tis holyday; provide me better cheer:
'Tis holyday; and shall be round the year:
Shall I my houshold gods and genius cheat,
To make him rich who grudges me my meat?
That he may loll at ease, and pamper'd high,
When I am laid, may feed on giblet pie? Dryden.

GI'BSTAFF. n. s.

1. A long staff to gage water, or to shove forth a vessel into the deep.

2. A weapon used formerly to fight beasts upon the stage. Dict.

GI'DDILY. adv. [from giddy.]

1. With the head seeming to turn round.

2. Inconstantly; unsteadily.

To roam
Giddily, and be every where but at home,
Such freedom doth a banishment become. Donne.

3. Carelesly; heedlesly; negligently.

The parts that fortune hath bestow'd upon her,
Tell her, I hold as giddily as fortune. Shakesp.

GI'DDINESS. n. s. [from giddy]

1. The state of being giddy or vertiginous; the sensation which we have when every thing seems to turn round.

Megrims and giddiness are rather when we rise after long sitting, than while we sit. Bacon.

This blessed thistle, which is so sovereign a medicine against the giddiness of the brain; 'tis this will settle it. Holyday.

Vain show and noise intoxicate the brain,
Begin with giddiness, and end in pain. Young.

2. Inconstancy; unsteadiness; mutability; changeableness.

There be that delight in giddiness, and count it a bondage to fix a belief. Bacon.

3. Quick rotation; inability to keep its place.

The indignation of Heaven rolling and turning us, 'till at length such a giddiness seized upon government, that it fell into the very dregs of sectaries. South.

4. Frolick; wantonness of life.

Thou like a contrite penitent,
Charitably warn'd of thy sins, do'st repent
These vanities and giddinesses. Donne.

GI'DDY. adj. [ȝiddiȝ, Sax. I know not whether this word may not come from gad, to wander, to be in motion, gad, gid, giddy.]

1. Vertiginous; having in the head a whirl, or sensation of circular motion, such as happens by disease or drunkenness.

Them rev'ling thus the Tentyrites invade,
By giddy heads and stagg'ring legs betray'd. Tate.

2. Rotatory; whirling; running round with celerity.

As Ixion fix'd, the wretch shall feel
The giddy motion of the whirling mill. Pope.

3. Inconstant; mutable; unsteady; changeful.

Our fancies are more giddy and unfirm,
More longing, wavering, sooner lost and won,
Than women's are. Shakesp. Twelfth Night.

It may be gnats and flies have their imagination more mutable and giddy, as small birds likewise have. Bacon.

Thanks to giddy chance, which never bears
That mortal bliss should last for length of years,
She cast us headlong from our high estate,
And here in hope of thy return we wait. Dryden.

The giddy vulgar, as their fancies guide,
With noise say nothing, and in parts divide.
Dryden's Æneid.

You are as giddy and volatile as ever, the reverse of Pope; who hath always loved a domestick life. Swift to Gay.

4. That causes giddiness.

The frequent errors of the pathless wood,
The giddy precipice, and the dang'rous flood. Pri.

The sylphs through mystick mazes guide their way,
Through all the giddy circle they pursue. Pope.

5. Heedless; thoughtless; uncautious; wild.

Too many giddy foolish hours are gone,
And in fantastick measures danc'd away. Rowe.

How inexcusable are those giddy creatures, who, in the same hour leap from a parent's window to a husband's bed. Clarissa.

6. Tottering; unfixed.

As we have pac'd along
Upon the giddy footing of the hatches,
Methought that Glo'ster stumbled. Shakesp.

7. Intoxicated; elated to thoughtlessness; overcome by any overpowering incitement.

Art thou not giddy with the fashion too, that thou hast shifted out of thy tale into telling me of the fashion? Shakesp.

Like one of two contending in a prize,
That thinks he hath done well in people's eyes;
Hearing applause and universal shout,
Giddy in spirit, gazing still in doubt,
Whether those peals of praise be his or no. Shak.

To GI'DDY. v. n. [from the noun.] To turn quick. Obsolete.

A sodaine north-wind fetcht,
With an extreame sea, quite about againe,
Our whole endeavours; and our course constrain
To giddie round. Chapman.

GI'DDYBRAINED. adj. [giddy and brain.] Careless; thoughtless.

Turn him out again, you unnecessary, useless, giddybrain'd ass! Otway's Ven. Preserv.

GI'DDYHEADED. adj. [giddy and head.] Without thought or caution; without steadiness or constancy.

And sooner may a gulling weather spy,
By drawing forth heav'ns scheme discry
What fashion'd hats or ruffs, or suits, next year,
Our giddy-headed antick youth will wear. Donne.

That men are so misaffected, melancholy, giddy-headed, hear the testimony of Solomon. Burton Mel.

GI'DDYPACED. adj. [giddy and pace.] Moving without regularity.

More than light airs, and recollected terms,
Of these most brisk and giddypaced times. Shak.

These fowls shall not be eaten, the swan and the pelican, and the gier-eagle. Leviticus.

GIFT. n. s. [from give.]

1. A thing given or bestowed; something conferred without price.
They presented unto him gifts, gold, and frankincense and myrrh. Matt. ii. 11.
Recall your gift, for I your pow'r confess;
But first take back my life, a gift that's less. Dry.
2. The act of giving.
Creator bounteous, and benign,
Giver of all things good, but fairest this
Of all thy gifts, nor envyest. Milton.
Thee all things living gaze on, all things thine
By gift. Milton.
3. The right or power of bestowing.
They cannot give;
For had the gift been theirs, it had not here
Thus grown. Milton.
No man has any antecedent right or claim to that which comes to him by free gift. South.
4. Oblation; offering.
Many nations shall come with gifts in their hands, even gifts to the king of heaven. Tob. xiii. 11.
5. A bribe.
Thou shalt not wrest judgement, thou shalt not respect persons, neither take a gift; for a gift doth blind the eyes of the wise. Deut. xvi. 19.
6. Power; faculty.
And if the boy have not a woman's gift,
To rain a shower of commanded tears,
An onion will do well for such a shift. Shakesp.
She was lovely to attract
Thy love, not thy subjection, and her gifts
Were such as made government well seem'd
Unseemly to bear rule. Milton.
He who has the gift of ridicule, finds fault with any thing that gives him an opportunity of exerting his talent. Addison.

GI'FTED. adj. [from gift.]
1. Given; bestowed.
Made of my enemies the scorn and gaze,
To grind in brazen fetters, under task,
With my heav'n gifted strength. Milton's Agon.
2. Endowed with extraordinary powers. It is commonly used ironically.
Two of their gifted brotherhood, Hacket and Coppinger, got up into a pease-cart, and harangued the people to dispose them to an insurrection. Dryden.
There is no talent so pernicious as eloquence, to those who have it not under command: women, who are so liberally gifted by nature in this particular, ought to study the rules of female oratory. Addison's Freeholder.

GIG. n. s. [Etymology uncertain.]
1. Any thing that is whirled round in play.
Playthings, as tops, gigs, battledores, should be procured them. Locke.
2. [Gigia, Islandick.] A fiddle. Now out of use.

GIGA'NTICK. adj. [gigantes, Lat.] Suitable to a giant; big; bulky; enormous; likewise wicked; atrocious.
Others from the wall defend
With dart and jav'lin, stones, and sulphurous fire;
On each hand slaughter and gigantick deeds. Milt.
I dread him not, nor all his giant brood,
Though fame divulg'd him father of five sons,
All of gigantick size, Goliah chief. Milton's Agon.
The son of Hercules he justly seems,
By his broad shoulders, and gigantick limbs. Dry.
The Cyclopean race in arms arose;
A lawless nation of gigantick foes. Pope's Odyssey.

To GI'GGLE. v. n. [gichelen, Dut.] To laugh idly; to titter; to grin with merry levity. It is retained in Scotland.
We shew our present joking, giggling race;
True joy consists in gravity and grace. Garrick's Ep.

GI'GGLER. n. s. [from giggle.] A laugher; a titterer; one idly and foolishly merry.
A sad wise valour is the brave complexion,
That leads the van, and swallows up the cities:
The giggler is a milk-maid, whom infection,
Or the fir'd beacon, frighteth from his ditties. Herb.

GI'GLET. n. s. [ȝeaȝl, Sax. geyl, Dut. gillet, Scott. is still retained.] A wanton; a lascivious girl. Now out of use.
Young Talbot was not born
To be the pillage of a giglet wench. Shakesp.

Upon this gilded majesty of Spain,
And knowing well that empire must decline,
Whose chief support and sinews are of coin. Wal.
Her joy in gilded chariots, when alive;
And love of ombre after death survive. Pope.
2. To cover with any yellow matter.
Thou did'st drink
The stale of horses and the gilded puddle
Which beasts would cough at. Shak. Ant. and Cleop.
3. To adorn with lustre.
No more the rising sun shall gild the morn,
Nor ev'ning Cynthia fill her silver horn.
Pope's Mes.
4. To brighten; to illuminate.
The lightsome passion of joy was not that trivial, vanishing, superficial thing, that only gilds the apprehension, and plays upon the surface of the soul. South.
5. To recommend by adventitious ornaments.
For my part, if a lie may do thee grace,
I'll gild it with the happiest terms I have. Shak.
Yet, oh! th' imperfect piece moves more delight;
'Tis gilded o'er with youth, to catch the sight.
Dryden.

GI'LDER. n. s. [from gild.]
1. One who lays gold on the surface of any other body.
Gilders use to have a piece of gold in their mouth, to draw the spirits of the quicksilver. Bac.
We have here a gilder, with his anvil and hammer. Broome.
2. A coin, from one shilling and six pence, to two shillings. Phil.
I am bound
To Persia, and want gilders for my voyage. Shak.

GI'LDING. n. s. [from gild.] Gold laid on any surface by way of ornament.
Silvering will sully and canker more than gilding, which, if it might be corrected with a little mixture of gold, there is profit. Bacon.
The church of the Annunciation, all but one corner of it, is covered with statues, gilding, and paint. Addison on Italy.
Could laureate Dryden Pimp and Fry'r engage,
And I not strip the gilding off a knave,
Unplac'd, unpension'd, no man's heir or slave! Pope.

GILL. n. s. [agulla, Span. gula, Lat.]
1. The apertures at each side of a fish's head.
The leviathan,
Stretch'd like a promontory, sleeps or swims,
And seems a moving land, and at his gills
Draws in, and at his trunk spouts out a sea. Milt.
Fishes perform respiration under water by the gills. Ray.
He hath two gill-fins; not behind the gills, as in most fishes, but before them. Walton.
'Till they, of farther passage quite bereft,
Were in the mesh with gills entangl'd left. King.
2. The flaps that hang below the beak of a fowl.
The turkeycock hath great and swelling gills, and the hen hath less. Bacon's Natural History.
3. The flesh under the chin.
In many there is no paleness at all; but, contrariwise, redness about the cheeks and gills, which is by the sending forth of spirits in an appetite to revenge. Bacon's Natural History.
Like the long bag of flesh hanging down from the gills of the people in Piedmont. Swift.
4. [Gilla, barbarous Latin.] A measure of liquids containing the fourth part of a pint.
Every bottle must be rinced with wine: some, out of mistaken thrift, will rince a dozen with the same: change the wine at every second bottle: a gill may be enough. Swift.
5. A kind of measure among the tinners.
They measure their block-tin by the gill, which containeth a pint. Carew.
6. In the northern counties it is half a pint of liquid measure.
7. [From gillian, the old English way of writing Julian, or Juliana.] The appellation of a woman in ludicrous language.
I can, for I will,
Here at Burley o' th' Hill,
Give you all your fill,
Each Jack with his Gill. Ben Jonson's Gypsies.

He blended together the livers of giltheads, the brains of pheasants and peacocks, tongues of phenicopters, and the melts of lampres. Hakewill.

GILT-TAIL. n. s. [gilt and tail.] A worm so called from his yellow tail.

GIM. adj. [An old word.] Neat; spruce; well dressed.

GI'MCRACK. n. s. [Supposed by Skinner to be ludicrously formed from gin, derived from engine.] A slight or trivial mechanism.

For though these gimcracks were away,
However, more reduc'd and plain,
The watch would still a watch remain;
But if the horal orbit ceases,
The whole stands still, or breaks to pieces. Prior.

What's the meaning of all these trangrams and gimcracks? Jumping over my master's hedges, and running your lines cross his grounds? Arbuth.

GI'MLET. n. s. [gibelet, guimbelet, Fr.] A borer with a screw at its point.

The gimlet hath a worm at the end of its bit. Moxon.

GI'MMAL. n. s. [Supposed by Skinner and Ainsworth to be derived from gimellus, Lat. and to be used only of something consisting of correspondent parts, or double. It seems rather to be gradually corrupted from geometry or geometrical. Any thing done by occult means is vulgarly said to be done by geometry.] Some little quaint devices or pieces of machinery. Hanmer.

I think by some odd gimmals or device
Their arms are set like clocks, still to strike on,
Else they could not hold out so as they do. Shak.

GI'MMER. n. s. [See GIMMAL.] Movement; machinery.

The holding together of the parts of matter has so confounded me, that I have been prone to conclude with myself, that the gimmers of the world hold together not so much by geometry as some natural magick. More's Divine Dialogues.

GIMP. n. s. [See GIM. Gimp, in old English, is neat, spruce.] A kind of silk twist or lace.

GIN. n. s. [from engine.]

1. A trap; a snare.

As the day begins,
With twenty gins we will the small birds take,
And pastime make. Sidney.

Which two, through treason and deceitful gin,
Hath slain sir Mordant. Spenser.

So strives the woodcock with the gin;
So doth the coney struggle in the net. Shakesp.

Be it by gins, by snares, by subtilty. Shakesp.

If those, who have but sense, can shun
The engines that have them annoy'd;
Little for me had reason done,
If I could not thy gins avoid. Ben Jonson's Forest.

I know thy trains,
Though dearly to my cost, thy gins and toils;
No more on me have pow'r, their force is null'd. Milton.

He made a planetary gin,
Which rats would run th ir own heads in,
And come on purpose to be taken,
Without th' expence of cheese and bacon. Hud.

Keep from flaying, scourge thy skin,
And ankle free from iron gin. Huddibras

2. Any thing moved with screws, as an engine of torture.

Typhœus' joints were stretched on a gin. Spens

3. A pump worked by rotatory sails.

The delfs would be so flown with waters, it being impossible to make any adits or soughs to drain them, that no gins or machines would suffice to lay and keep them dry. Ray

A bituminous plate, alternately yellow and black, formed by water driveling on the outside of the gin pump of Mostyn coalpits. Wood. on Foss

4. [Contracted from GENEVA, which see.] The spirit drawn by distillation from juniper berries.

This calls the church to deprecate our sin,
And hurls the thunder of our laws on gin. Pope.

Gin shops sourer sighs return. Pope.

GI'NGER. n. s. [zinziber, Lat. gingero, Ital.] The flower consists of five leaves, shaped somewhat like those of the iris: these are produced in the head or club, each coming out of a separate leafy scale. The ovary becomes a triangular fruit, having three cells which contain seeds Miller.

The root of ginger is of the tuberous kind, knotty, crooked, and irregular; of a hot, acrid, and pungent taste, though aromatick, and of a very agreeable smell. The Indians eat both the young shoots of the leaves and the roots themselves. Hill.

Or wafting ginger round the streets to go,
And visit alehouse where ye first did grow. Pope.

GI'NGERBREAD. n. s. [ginger and bread.] A kind of farinaceous sweetmeat made of dough, like that of bread or biscuit, sweetened with treacle, and flavoured with ginger and some other aromatick seeds. It is sometimes gilt.

An' I had but one penny in the world, thou should'st have it to buy gingerbread. Shakesp.

Her currants there and gooseberries were spread,
With the enticing gold of gingerbread. King's Cook.

'Tis a loss you are not here, to partake of three weeks frost, and eat gingerbread in a booth by a fire upon the Thames. Swift.

GI'NGERLY. adv. [I know not whence derived.] Cautiously; nicely.

What is't that you
Took up so gingerly? Shakesp.

GI'NGERNESS. n. s. Niceness; tenderness. Dict.

GI'NGIVAL. adj. [gingiva, Lat.] Belonging to the gums.

Whilst the Italians strive to cut a thread in their pronunciation between D and T, so to sweeten it, they make the occluse appulse, especially the gingival, softer than we do, giving a little of pervivousness. Holder's Elements of Speech.

To GI'NGLE. v. n.

1. To utter a sharp clattering noise; to utter a sharp noise in quick succession.

The foot grows black that was with dirt embrown'd,
And in thy pocket gingling halfpence found. Gay.

Once, we confess, beneath the patriot's cloak,
From the crack'd bag the dropping guinea spoke,
And gingling down the backstairs, told the crew,
Old Cato is as great a rogue as you. Pope's Epistles.

2. To make an effected sound in periods or cadence.

To GI'NGLE. v. a. To shake so that a sharp shrill clattering noise should be made.

Her infant grandame's whistle next it grew;
The bells she gingled, and the whistle blew. Pope.

GI'NGLE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A shrill resounding noise.

2. Affectation in the sound of periods.

GI'NGLYMOID. adj. [γιγλυμος a hinge, and εἶδος.] Resembling a ginglymus; approaching to a ginglymus.

The malleus lies along, fixed to the tympanum, and on the other end is joined to the incus by a double or ginglymoid joint. Holder.

GI'NGLYMUS. n. s. A mutual indenting of two bones into each other's cavity, in the manner of a hinge, of which the elbow is an assistance. Wiseman.

GI'NNET. n. s. [γιννος.] A nag; a mule; a degenerated breed. Hence, according to some, but, I believe, erroneously, a Spanish gennet, improperly written for ginnet.

GI'NSENG. n. s. [I suppose Chinese.] A root brought lately into Europe, of a brownish colour on the outside, and somewhat yellowish within; and so pure and fine, that it seems almost transparent. It is of a very agreeable and aromatick smell, though not very strong. Its taste is acrid and aromatick, with somewhat bitter in it. We have it from China and America. The Chinese value this root at three times it weight in silver. Hill.

To GIP. v. a. To take out the guts of herrings. Bailey.

GI'PSY. n. s. [Corrupted from Egyptian; for when they first appeared in Europe, they declared, and, perhaps, truly, that they were driven from Egypt by the Turks. They are now mingled with all nations.]

1. A vagabond who pretends to foretell futurity, commonly by palmestry or physiognomy.

The butler, though he is sure to lose a knife, a fork, or a spoon every time his fortune is told him, shuts himself up in the pantry with an old gipsy for above half an hour. Addison.

A frantick gipsey now, the house he haunts,
And in wild phrases speaks dissembled wants. Pri.

In this still labyrinth around her lie
Spells, philters, globes, and spheres of palmestry;
A sigil in his hand the gipsey bears,
In th' other a prophetic sieve and sheers. Garth.

I, near you stile, three sallow gypsies met;
Upon my hand they cast a poring look,
Bid me beware, and thrice their heads they shook. Gay.

2. A reproachful name for a dark complexion.

Laura, to her lady, was but a kitchen-wench; Dido a dowdy; Cleopatra a gipsy; Helen and Hero hildings and harlots. Shakesp. Romeo and Jul.

3. A name of slight reproach to a woman.

The widow play'd the gypsy, and so did her confidant too, in pretending to believe her. L'Estr.

A slave I am to Clara's eyes:
The gipsy knows her pow'r, and flies. Prior.

GI'RASOLE. n. s. [girasol, Fr.]

Now back he gives, then rushes on amain.
Daniel's Civil War.

4. To give in. To go back; to give away. Not in use.

The charge was given with so well governed fury, that the left corner of the Scots battalion was enforced to give in. Hayward.

5. To give into. [A French phrase.] To adopt; to embrace.

This is a geography particular to the medalists; the poets, however, have sometimes given in to it, and furnish us with very good lights for the explication of it. Addison on Medals.

This consideration may induce a translator to give in to those general phrases, which have attained a veneration in our language from being used in the Old Testament. Pope.

The whole body of the people are either stupidly negligent, or else giving in with all their might to those very practices that are working their destruction. Swift.

6. To give off. To cease; to forbear.

The punishment would be kept from being too much, if we gave off as soon as we perceived that it reaches the mind. Locke.

7. To give over. To cease; to act no more.

If they will speak to the purpose, they must give over, and stand upon such particulars only as they can shew we have either added or abrogated, otherwise than we ought, in the matter of church polity. Hooker.

Neither hath Christ, thro' union of both natures, incurred the damage of either, lest, by being born a man, we should think he hath given over to be God, or that because he continued God, therefore he cannot be man also. Hooker.

Give not o'er so; to him again; intreat him,
Kneel down before him, hang upon his gown,
You are too cold. Shakesp. Measure for Measure.

The state of human actions is so variable, that to try things oft, and never to give over, doth wonders. Bacon's Natural History.

Demetrius, king of Macedon, had a petition offered him divers times by an old woman, and still answered he had no leisure; whereupon the woman said aloud, Why then give over to be king.
Bacon.

So Satan, whom repulse upon repulse
Met ever, and to shameful silence brought
Yet gives not o'er, though desperate of success.
Milton.

Shall we kindle all this flame
Only to put it out again?
And must we now give o'er,
And only end where we begun?
In vain this mischief we have done,
If we can do no more. Denham

It would be well for all authors, if they knew when to give over, and to desist from any farther pursuits after fame. Addison.

He coined again, and was forced to give over for the same reason. Swift

8. To give out. To publish; to proclaim.

Simon bewitched the people of Samaria, giving out that himself was some great one. Acts, viii. 9.

Julius Cæsar laid asleep Pompey's preparations, by a fame that he cunningly gave out how Cæsar's own soldiers loved him not. Bacon.

Your ill-wishers will give out you are now going to quit your school. Swift.

9. To give out. To cease; to yield.

We are the earth; and they,
Like moles within us, heave and cast about:
And 'till they foot and clutch their prey;
They never cool, much less give out. Herbert.

Madam, I always believ'd you so stout,
That for twenty denials you would not give out.
Swift.

GI'VER. n. s. [from give.] One that gives; donor; bestower; distributor; granter.

Well we may afford
Our givers their own gifts. Milton's Par. Lost.

By thee how fairly is the giver now
Repaid? But gratitude in thee is lost
Long since. Milton's Paradise Regained.

I have not liv'd since first I heard the news;
The gift the guilty giver doth accuse. Dryden.

Both gifts destructive to the givers prove;
Alike both lovers fall by those they love.
Pope.

GIVES. n. s. Fetters or shackles for the feet.

GI'ZZARD. n. s. [gesier, Fr. gigeria Lat.] It is sometimes called gizzern.

1. The strong musculous stomach of a fowl.

Fowls have two ventricles, and pick up stones to convey them into their second ventricle, the gizzerne. More.

In birds there is no mastication in the mouth but in such as are not carnivorous, it is immediately swallowed into the crop, a kind of ante-stomach, where it is moistened by some proper juice from the glandules distilling in there, and thence transfered into the gizzard, or musculous stomach. Ray.

They nestle near the throne,
By their high corps and corny gizzards known.
Dryden

2. It is proverbially used for apprehension or conception of mind: as, he frets his gizzard, he harrasses his imagination.

But that which does them greatest harm,
Their spiritual gizzards are to warm;
Which puts the overheated sots
In fevers still. Hudibras.

Satisfaction and restitution lie so cursedly hard upon the gizzards of our publicans, that their blood is not half so dear to them as the treasure in their coffers. L'Estrange.

GLA'BRITY. n. s. [from glaber, Lat.] Smoothness; baldness. Dict.

GLA'CIAL. adj. [glacial, Fr. glacialis, Lat.] Icy; made of ice; frozen.

To GLACIATE. v. n. [glacies, Lat. glacer, Fr.] To turn into ice.

GLACIA'TION. n. s. [from glaciate.] The act of turning into ice; ice formed.

Ice is plain upon the surface of water, but round in hail, which is also a glaciation, and figured in its guttulous descent from the air. Brown's Vulg. Err.

GLA'CIOUS. adj. [glacio, Lat.] Icy; resembling ice.

Although exhaled and placed in cold conservatories, it will crystallize and shoot into glacious bodies. Brown's Vulg. Err.

GLA'CIS. n. s. [Fr.] In fortification, a sloping bank. It is more especially taken for that which rangeth from the parapet of the covered way to the level on the side of the field. Harris.

GLAD. adj. [ȝlæd, Sax. glad, Dan.]

1. Cheerful; gay; in a state of hilarity.

They blessed the king, and went unto their tents joyful and glad of heart. 1 Kings, viii. 66.

Glad we return'd up to the coasts of light. Milt.

The wily adder blithe and glad Milton

Thither they
Hasted with glad precipitance. Milton

2. Wearing a gay appearance; fertile; bright; showy.

The wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad for them, and the desart shall rejoice and blossom as the rose. Isaiah, xxxv.

Then first adorn'd
With their bright luminaries, that set and rose,
Glad Ev'ning and glad Morn crown'd the fourth day. Milton.

3. Pleased; elevated with joy. It has generally of, sometimes at or with before the cause of gladness: perhaps of is most proper, when the cause of joy is something gained or possessed; and at or with, when it is some accident befallen himself or another.

I am glad to see your worship. Shakesp.

He hath an uncle in Messia will be very much glad of it. Shakesp.

He that is glad at calamities shall not be unpunished. Proverbs.

He glad
Of her attention, gain'd with serpent tongue,
His fradulent temptation thus began Milton.

If he be my enemy, let him triumph; if he be my friend, he will be glad of my repentance. Dryden.

The gaping wound gush'd out a crimson flood;
The Trojan, glad with sight of hostile blood,
His fauchion drew. Dryden's Æn.

Glad of a quarrel strait I clap the door. Pope.

† Pleasing; exhilarating.

Her conversation
More glad to me than to a miser money is. Sidney.

5. Expressing gladness.

Hark! a glad voice the lonely desert cheers:
Prepare the way, a God, a God appears! Pope.

6. It is used in a familiar sense, approaching to ludicrousness.

I would be glad to learn from those who pronounce that the human soul always thinks, how they know it. Locke.

To GLAD. v. a. [from the adjective.] To make glad; to cheer; to exhilarate.

He saw rich nectar-thaws release the rigour
Of th' icy North; from frost-bound Atlas hands
His adamantine fetters fall: green vigour
Gladding the Scythian rocks, and Lybian sands. Crashaw.

It glads me
To see so many virtues thus united,
To restore justice and dethrone oppression. Otway.

Each drinks the juice that glads the heart of man. Pope.

If justice Philips' costive head
Some frigid rhymes disburses,
They shall like Persian tales be read,
And glad both babes and nurses. Swift.

To GLA'DDEN. v. a. [from glad.] To cheer; to delight; to make glad; to exhilarate.

Oh, he was all made up of love and charms!
Delight of every eye! When he appear'd,
A secret pleasure gladden'd all that saw him Addison.

A kind of vital heat in the soul cheers and gladdens her, when she does not attend to it. Addison's Spectator.

GLA'DDER. n. s. [from glad.] One that makes glad; one that gladdens; one that exhilarates.

Thou gladder of the mount of Cytheron,
Have pity, goddess. Dryden.

GLADE. n. s. [from ȝlopan to be hot, or to shine; whence the Danish glod, and the obsolete English gleed a red hot coal.] A lawn or opening in a wood. Lucus. It is taken for an avenue through a wood, whether open or shaded, and has therefore epithets of opposite meaning.

So flam'd his eyen with rage and rancorous ire;
But far within, as in a hollow glade,
Those glaring lamps were set, that made a dreadful shade. Spenser.

Lo where they spy'd, how in a gloomy glade
The lion sleeping, lay in secret shade. Hubberd.

O might I here
In solitude live savage, in some glade
Obscur'd, where highest woods, impenetrable
To star or sun-light, spread their umbrage broad,
And brown as evening. Milton's Paradise Lost.

When any, favour'd of high Jove,
Chances to pass through this adventurous glade,
Swift as a sparkle of a glancing star
I shoot from heav'n to give him save convoy. Milton.

For noonday's heat are closer arbours made,
And for fresh ev'ning air the op'ner glade. Dryd.

There interspers'd in lawns and opening glades;
Thin trees arise that shun each other's shades Pope.

By the heroes armed shades
Glitt'ring through the gloomy glades;
By the youths that dy'd for love,
Wand'ring in the myrtle grove,
Restore, restore Eurydice to life!
Oh! take the husband or restore the wife! Pope.

She smil'd, array'd
With all the charms of sun-shine, stream and glade,
New dress and blooming as a bridal maid. Harte.

GLA'DEN. } n. s. [from gladius, Lat. a
GLA'DER. } sword.] Sword-grass: a general name of plants that rise with a broad blade like sedge. Junius.

GLA'DFULNESS. n. s. [glad and fulness.] Joy; gladness. Obsolete.

And there him rests in riotous suffisance
Of all his gladfulness, and kingly joyance. Spenser.

GLADIA'TOR. n. s. [Lat. gladiateur, Fr.] A swordplayer; a prizefighter.

Then whilst his foe each gladiator foils,
The atheists, looking on, enjoys the spoils. Denham.

Besides, in gratitude for such high matters,
Know I have vow'd two hundred gladiators. Dryden.

GLA'DLY. adv. [from glad.] Joyfully; with gayety; with merriment; with triumph; with exultation.

For his particular, I'll receive him gladly;
But not one follower. Shakesp. King Lear.

You are going to set us right; and 'tis an advantage every body will gladly see you engross the glory of. Blount to Pope.

GLA'DNESS. n. s. [from glad.] Cheerfulness; joy; exultation.

By such degrees the spreading gladness grew
In every heart, which fear had froze before:
The standing streets with so much joy they view,
That with less grief the perish'd they deplore. Dryden.

GLA'DSOME. adj. [from glad.]

1. Pleased; gay; delighted.

The highest angels to and fro descend,
From highest heaven in gladsome company. Fairy Queen

The gladsome ghost in circling troops attend,
And with unweary'd eyes behold their friend. Dryden.

2. Causing joy; having an appearance of gayety.

Each morn they wak'd me with a sprightly lay;
Of opening heav'n they sung and gladsome day. Prior.

GLA'DSOMELY. adv. [from gladsome.] With gayety and delight.

GLA'DSOMENESS. n. s. [from gladsome.] Gayety; showyness; delight.

1. The white of an egg.

Take the glaire of eggs, and strain it as short as water. Peacham.

2. A kind of halbert. Dict.

To GLAIRE. v. a. [glairer, Fr. from the noun.] To smear with the white of an egg. This word is still used by the bookbinders.

GLANCE. n. s. [glantz, Germ. glitter.]

1. A sudden shoot of light or splendour.

His off'ring soon propitious fire from heav'n
Consum'd with nimble glance, and grateful steam.
The other's not; for his was not sincere. Milton

2. A stroke or dart of the beam of sight.

The aspects which procure love are not gazings, but sudden glances and dartings of the eye. Bacon.

There are of those sort of beauties which last but for a moment; some particularity of a violent passion, some graceful action, a smile, a glance of an eye, a disdainful look, and a look of gravity. Dryd.

Boldly she look'd, like one of high degree·
Yet never seem'd to cast a glance on me;
At which I inly joy'd, for truth to say,
I felt an unknown awe, and some dismay. Harte

3. A snatch of sight; a quick view.

The ample mind takes a survey of several objects with one glance. Watts on the Mind.

To GLANCE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To shoot a sudden ray of splendour.

He double blows about him fiercely laid,
That glancing fire out of the iron play'd,
As sparkles from the anvil use,
When heavy hammers on the wedge are sway'd. Spenser.

When through the gloom the glancing lightnings fly,
Heavy the rattling thunders roll on high. Rowe

2. To fly off in an oblique direction.
He has a little gall'd me, I confess;
But as the jest did glance away from me,
'Tis ten to one it maim'd you two outright. Shak
3. To strike in an oblique direction.
Through Paris' shield the forceful weapon went,
His corslet pierces, and his garment rends,
And glancing downwards near his flank descends. Pope.
4. To view with a quick cast of the eye; to play the eye.
O' th' sudden up they rise and dance,
Then sit again, and sigh and glance;
Then dance again and kiss. Suckling.
Mighty dulness crown'd, [round,
Shall take through Grub-street her triumphant
And her Parnassus glancing o'er at once,
Behold a hundred sons, and each a dunce. Pope.
5. To censure by oblique hints.
How can'st thou thus, for shame, Titania,
Glance at my credit with Hippolita,
Knowing I know thy love to Theseus? Shakesp.
Some men glance and dart at others, by justifying themselves by negatives; as to say, this I do not. Bacon.
I have never glanced upon the late designed procession of his holiness and his attendants, notwithstanding it might have afforded matter to many ludicrous speculations. Addison.
He had written verses wherein he glanced at a certain reverend doctor, famous for dulness. Swift.

To GLANCE. v. a. To move nimbly; to shot obliquely.
Glancing an eye of pity on his losses,
Enough to press a royal merchant down. Shakesp.

GLA'NCINGLY. adv. [from glance.] In an oblique broken manner; transiently.
Sir Richard Hawkins hath done something in this kind, but brokingly and glancingly, intending chiefly a discourse of his own voyage. Hakewill.

GLAND. n. s. [glans, Lat. gland, Fr.]
All the glands of a human body are reduced to two sorts, viz. conglobate and conglomerate. A conglobate gland is a little smooth body, wrapt up in a fine skin, by which it is separated from all the other parts, only admitting an artery and nerve to pass in, and giving way to a vein and excretory canal to come out: of this sort are the glands in the brain, the labial glands, and testes. A conglomerate gland is composed of many little conglobate glands, all tied together, and wrapt up in the common tunicle or membrane. Quincy.
The abscess begun deep in the body of the glands. Wiseman.
The glands, which o'er the body spread,
Fine complicated clues of nervous thread,
Involv'd and twisted with th' arterial duct,
The rapid motion of the blood obstruct. Blackmore.

GLA'NDERS. n. s. [from gland.] In a horse is the running of corrupt matter from the nose, which differs in colour according to the degree of the malignity, being white, yellow, green or black. Farrier's Dict.
His horse is possest with the glanders, and like to mose in the chine. Shakesp Taming of the Shrew.

GLANDI'FEROUS. adj. [glans and fero, Lat.] Bearing mast; bearing acorns, or fruit like acorns.
The beech is of two sorts, and numbered amongst the gladiferous trees. Mortimer's Husb.

GLA'NDULE. n. s. [glandula, Lat. glandule, Fr.] A small gland serving to the secretion of humours.
Nature hath provided several glandules to separate this juice from the blood, and no less than four pair of channels to convey it into the mouth, which are called ductus salivales. Ray.

GLANDULO'SITY. n. s. [from glandulous.] A collection of glands.
In the upper parts of worms are found certain white and oval gladulosities. Brown's Vulg. Err.

GLA'NDULOUS. adj. [glandulosus, Lat. glanduleux, Fr. from glandule.] Pertaining to the glands; subsisting in the glands; having the nature of glands.
The beaver's bags are no testicles, or parts official unto generation, but gladulous substances, that hold the nature of emunctories. Brown's Vulg. Err.
Such constitutions must be subject to glandulous tumours, and ruptures of the lymphaticks. Arbuth.

To GLARE. v. n. [glaren, Dut.]
1. To shine so as to dazzle the eyes.
After great light, if you come suddenly into the dark, or, contrariwise, out of the dark into a glaring light, the eye is dazzled for a time, and the sight confused. Bacon.
His glaring eyes with anger's venom swell,
And like the brand of foul Alecto flame. Fairfax.
He is every where above conceits of epigrammatick wit, and gross hyperboles: he maintains majesty in the midst of plainness; he shines, but glares not; and is stately without ambition Dryd.
The court of Cacus stands reveal'd to sight;
The cavern glares with new admitted light. Dryd.
Alas, thy dazzled eye
Beholds this man in a false glaring light,
Which conquest and success have thrown upon him. Addison.
2. To look with fierce piercing eyes.
Thou hast no speculation in those eyes,
Which thou dost glare with. Shakesp. Macbeth.
Look, how pale he glares! Shakesp. Hamlet.
Now friends no more, nor walking hand in hand;
But when they met they made a surly stand,
And glar'd, like angry lions, as they pass'd,
And wish'd that ev'ry look might be their last. Dryden.
3. To shine ostentatiously, or with too much laboured lustre.
The most glaring and notorious passages are none of the finest, or most correct. Felton on the Classicks.

To GLARE. v. a. To shoot such splendour as the eye cannot bear.
One spirit in them rul'd, and every eye
Glar'd lightning, and shot forth pernicious fire
Among th' accurst, that wither'd all their strength. Milton.

GLARE. n. s. [from the verb.]
1. Overpowering lustre; splendour, such as dazzles the eye.
The frame of burnish'd steel that cast a glare
From far, and seem'd to thaw the freezing air. Dryden's Fab.
I have grieved to see a person of quality gliding by me in her chair at two o'clock in the morning, and looking like a spectre amidst a glare of flambeaux. Addison's Guardian.
Here in a grotto, shelter'd close from air,
And screen'd in shades from day's detested glare,
She sighs for ever. Pope's Rape of the Locke.
2. A fierce piercing look.
About them round,
A lion now he stalks with fiery glare. Milton.

GLA'REOUS. adj. [glaireux, Fr. glareosus, Lat. from glair.] Consisting of viscous transparent matter, like the white of an egg.

GLA'RING. adj. Applied to any thing notorious: as, a glaring crime.

GLASS. n. s. [glæʃ, Sax. glas, Dut. as Pezon imagines from glás, British, green, In Erse it is called klánn, and this primarily signifies clean or clear, being so denominated from its transparency.]
1. An artificial substance made by fusing fixed salts and flint or sand together, with a vehement fire.
The word glass cometh from the Belgick and High Dutch: glass, from the verb glansen, which signifies amongst them to shine; or perhaps from glacies in the Latin, which is ice, whose colour it resembles. Peacham on Drawing.
Glass is thought so compact and firm a body, that it is indestructible by art or nature, and is also of close a texture that the subtlest chymical spirits cannot pervade it. Boyle.
Show'rs of grenadoes rain, by sudden burst
Disploding murd'rous bowels, fragments of steel
And stones, and glass and nitrous grain adust. Philips.
2. A glass vessel of any kind.
I'll see no more:
And yet the eighth appears, who bears a glass
Which shews me many more. Shakesp. Macb
3. A looking-glass; a mirrour.
He was the mark and glass, copy and book,
That fashion'd others. Shakesp. Henry IV
He spreads his subtile nets from sight
With trinkling glasses, to betray
The larks that in the meshes light. Dryd. Horace
4. An hour glass. A glass used in measuring time by the flux of sand.
Were my wife's liver
Infected as her life, she would not live
The running of one glass. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.
5. The destined time of a man's life.
No more his royall self did live, no more his noble sonne,
The golden Meleager now, their glasses all were run. Chapman.
6. A cup of glass used to drink in.
To this last costly treaty,
That swallow'd so much treasure, and like a glass
Did break i' th' rinsing. Shakesp. Henry VIII.
When thy heart
Dilates with fervent joys, and eager soul
Prompts to pursue the sparkling glass, be sure
'Tis time to shun it. Philips.
7. The quantity of wine usually contained in a glass; a draught.
While a man thinks one glass more will not make him drunk, that one glass hath disabled him from well discerning his present condition. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.
The first glass may pass for health, the second for good-humour, the third for our friends; but the fourth is for our enemies. Temple.
8. A perspective glass.
The moon whose orb
Through optick glass the Tuscan artist views. Milt.
Like those who survey the moon by glasses, I tell of a shining world above, but not relate the glories of the place. Dryden.

GLASS. adj. Vitreous; made of glass.
Get thee glass eyes:
And, like a scurvy politician, seem
To see the things thou do'st not. Shak. King Lear.
Glass bottles are more fit for this second fining than those of wood Mortimer's Husbandry.

To GLASS. v. a.
1. To see as in a glass; to represent as in a glass or mirrour. Not in use.
Methinks I am partaker of thy passion,
And in thy case do glass mine own debility. Sidney.
2. To case in glass.
Methought all his senses were lockt in his eye,
As jewels in crystal for some prince to buy;
Who tend'ring their own worth, from whence they were glasst,
Did point out to buy them, along as you past. Shak.
3. To cover with a glass; to glaze.
I have observed little grains of silver to lie hid in the small cavities, perhaps glassed over by a vitrifying heat, in crucibles wherein silver has been long kept in fusion. Boyle.

GLA'SSFURNACE. n. s. [glass and furnace.] A furnace in which glass is made by liquefaction.
If our dreamer pleases to try whether the glowing heat of a glass-furnace be barely a wandering imagination in a drowsy man's fancy, by putting his hand into it, he may perhaps be awakened into a certainty that it is something more than bare imagination. Locke.

GLA'SSGAZING. adj. [glass and gazing.] Finical; often contemplating himself in a mirrour.

A whorson, glasgazing, finical rogue. Shakesp.

GLA'SSGRINDER. n. s. [glass and grinder.] One whose trade is to polish and grind glass.

The glassgrinders complain of the trouble they meet with. Boyle.

GLA'SSHOUSE. n. s. [glass and house.] A house where glass is manufactured.

I remember to have met with an old Roman Mosaic, composed of little pieces of clay half vitrified, and prepared at the glasshouses. Addison.

GLA'SSMAN. n. s. [glass and man.] One who sells glass.

The profit of glasses consists only in a small present made by the glassman. Swift.

GLA'SSMETAL. n. s. [glass and metal.] Glass in fusion.

Let proof be made of the incorporating of copper or brass with glassmetal. Bacon's Phys. Rem.

GLA'SSWORK. n. s. [glass and work.] Manufactory of glass.

The crystalline Venice glass is a mixture, in equal portions, of stones brought from Pavia, and the ashes of a weed called kali, gathered in a desert between Alexandria and Rosetta; by the Egyptians used first for fuel, and then they crush the ashes into lumps like a stone, and so sell them to the Venetians for their glassworks. Bacon's Nat. History.

GLA'SSWORT. n. s. [salicornia, or saltwort.]

It hath an apetalous flower, wanting the empalement; for the stamina, or chives, and the embryoes grow on the extreme part of the leaves; these embryoes afterward become pods or bladders, which, for the most part, contain one seed. The inhabitants near the sea-coast cut the plants up toward the latter end of Summer; and, having dried them in the sun, they burn them for their ashes, which are used in making of glass and soap. These herbs are by the country people called kelp. From the ashes of these plants is extracted the salt called sal kali, or alkali, by the chymists. Miller.

For the fine glass we use the purest of the finest sand, and the ashes of chali or glasswort; and for the coarser or green sort the ashes of brake or other plants. Brown's Vulg. Errours.

GLA'SSY adj. [from glass.]

1. Made of glass; vitreous.

In the valley near mount Carmel in Judea there is a sand, which, of all others, hath most affinity with glass; insomuch as other minerals laid in it turn to a glassy substance. Bacon.

2. Resembling glass, as in smoothness or lustre, or brittleness.

Man! proud man!
Drest in a little brief authority,
Most ignorant of what he's most assur'd
His glassy essence, like an angry ape,
Plays such fantastick tricks before high heav'n,
As makes the angels weep. Shak. Meas. for Meas.

There is a willow grows aslant a brook,
That shows his hoary leaves in the glassy stream. Shakesp.

The magnet attracteth the shining or glassy powder brought from the Indies, usually employed in writing-dust. Brown.

Whose womb produc'd the glassy ice? Who bred
The hoary frosts that fall on winter's head?
Sandys.

The glassy deep. Dryden's Æn.

GLASTONBURY Thorn. n. s. A species of MEDLAR.

This species of thorn produces some bunches of flowers in Winter, and flowers again in the Spring. Miller.

GLAUCO'MA. n. s. [λγαύκωμα; glaucome, Fr.] A fault in the eye, which changes the crystalline humour into a greyish colour, without detriment of sight, and therein differs from what is commonly understood by suffusion. Quincy.

The glaucoma is no other disease than the cataract. Sharp.

GLAVE. n. s. [glaive, Fr. glaif a hook, Welsh.] A broad sword; a falchion.

Two hundred Greeks came next in sight well try'd,
Not surely arm'd in steel or iron strong,
But each a glave hath pendant by his side. Fairfax.
When zeal, with aged clubs and glaves,
Gave chace to rockets and white staves. Hudibras.

To GLAVER. v. n. [glave, Welsh, flattery; glupan, Sax. to flatter. It is still retained in Scotland.] To flatter; to wheedle. A low word.

Kingdoms have their distempers, intermissions, and paroxysms, as well as natural bodies; and a glavering council is as dangerous as a wheedling priest, or a flattering physician. L'Estrange.

To GLAZE. v. a. [To glass, only accidently varied.]

1. To furnish with windows of glass.

Let there be two delicate cabinets daintily paved, richly hanged, and glazed with crystalline glass. Bacon's Essays.

2. To cover with glass, as potters do their earthen ware; [from the French glaise, argilla.]

3. To overlay with something shining and pellucid.

Sorrow's eye, glaz'd with brining tears,
Divides one thing entire to many objects. Shak.

The reason of one man operates on that of another in all true oratory; wherein though with other ornaments he may glaze and brandish the weapons, yet is it sound reason that carries the strike home. Grew's Cosm. Sac.

White, with other strong colours, with which we paint that which we intend to glaze, are the life, the spirit, and the lustre of it. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

GLA'ZIER. n. s. [corrupted from glasier, or glassier, of glass.] One whose trade is to make glass windows. Other manufacturers of glass are otherwise named.

Into rabbets the several panes of glasswork are set, and fastened by the glazier. Moxon's Mech. Ex.

The dext'rous glazier strong returns the bound,
And gingling sashes on the penthouse sound. Gay.

And then, without the aid of neighbour's art,
Perform'd the carpenter's and glazier's part.
Harte.

GLEAM. n. s. [ȝelioma, Sax.] Sudden shoot of light; lustre; brightness.

Then was the fair Dodonian tree far seen
Upon seven hills to spread his gladsome gleam;
And conquerors bedecked with his green,
Along the banks of the Ausonian stream. Spenser.

At last a gleam
Of dawning light turn'd thitherward in haste
His travell'd steps. Milton's Paradise Lost.

As I bent down to look just opposite,
A shape within the wat'ry gleam appear'd,
Bending to look on me. Milton's Par. Lost.

Mine is a gleam of bliss too hot to last;
Wat'ry it shines, and will be soon o'ercast. Dryd.

We ken them from afar; the setting sun
Plays on their shining arms and burnish'd helmets,
And covers all the field with gleams of fire.
Addison.

In the clear azure gleam the flocks are seen,
And floating forests paint the waves with green.
Pope.

Nought was seen, and nought was heard,
But dreadful gleams,
Fires that glow. Pope's St. Cecilia.

To GLEAM. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To shine with sudden coruscation.

Observant of approaching day,
The meek-ey'd morn appears, mother of dews,
At first faint gleaming in the dappled East.
Thomson.

2. To shine.

On each hand the gushing waters play,
And down the rough cascade white dashing fall,
Or gleam in lengthen'd vistas through the trees.
Thomson.

GLEA'MY. adj. [from gleam.] Flushing; darting sudden coruscations of light.

In brazen arms, that cast a gleamy ray,
Swift through the town the warriour bends his way
Pope.

To GLEAN. v. a. [glaner, Fr. as Skinner thinks, from granum, Lat.]

1. To gather what the gatherers of the harvest leave behind.

She came and gleaned in the field after the reapers. Ruth, ii.

Cheap conquest for his following friends remain'd;
He reap'd the field, and they but only glean'd.
Dryden.

The precept of not gathering their land clean, but that something should be left to the poor to glean, was a secondary offering to God himself.
Nelson.

She went, by hard necessity compell'd,
To glean Palæmon's fields. Thomson's Autumn.

2. To gather any thing thinly scattered.

Gather
So much as from occasions you may glean,
If aught, to us unknown, afflicts him thus. Shak.

That goodness
Of gleaning all the land's wealth into one,
Into your own hands, card'nal, by extortion.
Shakesp.

They gleaned of them in the highways five thousand men. Judges, xx. 45.

But Argive chiefs, and Agamemnon's train,
When his refulgent arms flash'd through the shady plain,
Fled from his well-known face with wonted fear;
As when his thund'ring sword and pointed spear
Drove headlong to their ships, and glean'd the routed rear. Dryden's Æn.

In the knowledge of bodies we must be content to glean what we can from particular experiments; since we cannot, from a discovery of their real essences, grasp at a time whole sheaves, and in bundles comprehend the nature and properties of whole species together. Locke.

GLEAN. n. s. [from the verb.] Collection made laboriously by slow degrees.

Plains, meads, and orchards all the day he plies;
The gleans of yellow thyme distend his thighs:
He spoils the saffron. Dryden's Virgil.

GLE'ANER. n. s. [from glean.]

1. One who gathers after the reapers.

For still the world prevail'd, and its dread laugh,
Which scarce the firm philosopher can scorn,
Should his heart own a gleaner in the field.
Thomson.

2. One who gathers any thing slowly and laboriously.

An ordinary coffee-house gleaner of the city is an arrant statesman. Locke.

GLE'ANING. n. s. [from glean.] The act of gleaning, or thing gleaned.

There shall be as the shaking of an olive-tree, and as the gleaning of grapes when the vintage is done. Bible.

The orphan and widow are members of the same common family, and have a right to be supported out of the incomes of it, as the poor Jews had to gather the gleanings of the rich man's harvest. Atterbury.

GLEBE. n. s. [gleba, Lat.]

1. Turf; soil; ground.

This, like the moory plots, delights in sedgy bowers;
The grassy garlands loves, and oft attir'd with flowers
Of rank and mellow glebe. Drayton

Fertile of corn the glebe, of oil and wine,
With herds the pastures throng'd, with flocks the hills. Milton.

Mark well the flow'ring almonds in the wood;
If od'rous blooms the bearing branches load
The glebe will answer to the sylvan reign,
Great heats will follow, and large crops of grain.
Dryden.

Sleeping vegetables lie,
Till the glad summons of a genial ray
Unbinds the glebe, and call them out to day. Garth.

2. The land possessed as a part of the revenue of an ecclesiastical benefice.

The ordinary living or revenue of a parsonage is of three sorts: the one in land, commonly called the glebe; another in tythe, which is a set part of our goods rendered to God; the third, in other offerings bestowed upon God and his church by the people. Spelman.

A trespass done on a parson's glebe land, which is a freehold, cannot be tried in a spiritual court. Ayliffe's Parergon.

Many parishes have not an inch of glebe. Swift.

GLE'BOUS. adj. [from glebe.] Turfy. Dict.

GLE'BY. adj. [from glebe.] Turfy; perhaps in the following passage fat or fruitful, if it has indeed any meaning.

Pernicious flatt'ry! thy malignant seeds
In an ill hour, and by a fatal hand
Sadly diffus'd o'er virtue's gleby land,
With rising pride amidst the corn appear,
And choke the hopes and harvest of the year. Prior.

GLEDE. n. s. [ȝlibaȝlibe, Saxon.] A kind of hawk.

Ye shall not eat the glede, the kite, and the vulture. Deuteronomy.

GLEE. n. s. [ȝliȝȝe, Saxon.] Joy; merriment; gayety. It anciently signified musick played at feasts. It is not now used, except in ludicrous writing, or with some mixture of irony and contempt.

She marcheth home, and by her takes the night,
Whom all the people follow with great glee.
Fairy Queen.

Many wayfarers make themselves glee by vexing the inhabitants; who again foreslow not to baigne them with perfume. Carew.

Is Blouzelinda dead? Farewel my glee!
No happiness is now reserv'd for me. Gay.

The poor man then was rich, and liv'd with glee;
Each barley-head untaxt, and day-light free.
Harte.

GLEED. n. s. [from ȝlopan, Saxon, to glow.] A hot glowing coal. A provincial and obsolete word.

GLE'EFUL. adj. [glee and full.] Gay; merry; cheerful. Not used.

My lovely Aaron, wherefore look'st thou sad,
When every thing doth make a gleeful boast?
Shakespeare.

GLEEK. n. s. [ȝliȝȝe, Saxon.] Musick; or musician.

What will you give us?——No money, but the gleek: I will give you the minstrel. Shakesp.

To GLEEK. v. a. [ȝliȝman, in Saxon, is a mimick or a droll.]

1. To sneer; to gibe; to droll upon.

I can gleek upon occasion. Shakespeare.

I have seen you gleeking or galling at this gentleman twice or thrice. Shakespeare.

2. In Scotland it is still retained, and signifies to fool or spend time idly, with something of mimickry or drollery.

To GLEEN. v. a. To shine with heat or polish. I know not the original notion of this word: it may be of the same race with glow or with gleam. I have not remarked it in any other place.

Those who labour
The sweaty forge, who edge the crooked scythe,
Bend stubborn steel, and harden gleening armour,
Acknowledge Vulcan's aid. Prior.

GLEET. n. s. [It is written by Skinner glitt, and derived from ȝlıban, Saxon, to run softly.] A sanious ooze; a thin ichor running from a sore.

A hard dry eschar, without either matter or gleet. Wiseman's Surgery.

To GLEET. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To drip or ooze with a thin sanious liquor.

His thumb being inflamed and swelled, I made an incision into it to the bone: this not only bled, but gleeted a few drops. Wiseman.

2. To run slowly.

Vapours raised by the sun make clouds, which are carried up and down the atmosphere, 'till they hit against the mountainous places of the globe, and by this concussion are condensed, and so gleet down the caverns of these mountains, whose inner parts, being hollow, afford them a bason. Cheyne's Phil. Princ.

GLE'ETY. adj. [from gleet.] Ichorous; thinly sanious.

If the flesh lose its ruddiness, and the matter change to be thin and gleety, you may suspect it corrupting. Wiseman.

GLEN. n. s. [glean, Erse.] A valley; a dale; a depression between two hills.

From me his madding mind is start,
And wooes the widow's daughter of the glen. Spen.

GLEW. n. s. [gluten, Latin.] A viscous cement made by dissolving the skins of animals in boiling water, and drying the gelly. See GLUE.

GLIB. n. s. [from λιβω. Skinner.]

1. Smooth; slippery; so formed as to be easily moved.

Liquid bodies have nothing to sustain their parts, nor any thing to cement them; the parts being glib and continually in motion, fall off from one another, which way soever gravity inclines them. Burnet's Theory.

Habbakkuk brought him a smooth strong rope compactly twisted together, with a noose that slipt as glib as a birdcatcher's gin. Arbuthnot.

2. Smooth; voluble.

I want that glib and oily art
To speak and purpose not, since what I well intend,
I'll do't before I speak. Shakesp. King Lear.

There was never so much glib nonsense put together in well sounding English. Locke.

Now Curl his shop from rubbish drains;
Three genuine tomes of Swift's remains:
And then, to make them pass the glibber,
Revis'd by Tibbald, More, and Cibber. Swift.

Be sure he 's a fine spoken man;
Do but hear on the clergy how glib his tongue ran. Swift.

GLIB. n. s.

The Irish have from the Scythians mantles and long glibs; which is a thick curled bush of hair hanging down over their eyes, and monstrously disguising them. Spenser on Ireland.

To GLIB. v. a. [from the adjective.] To castrate.

I'll geld them all: fourteen they shall not see,
To bring false generations; they are coheirs,
And I had rather glib myself, than they
Should not produce fair issue. Shakespeare.

GLI'BLY. adv. [from glib.] Smoothly; volubly.

Many who would startle at an oath, whose stomachs as well as consciences recoil at an obscenity, do yet slide glibly into a detraction. Government of the Tongue.

GLI'BNESS. n. s. [from glib.] Smoothness; slipperiness.

A polish'd ice-like glibness doth enfold
The rock. Chapman's Odyssey.

The tongue is the most ready for motion of any member, needs not so much as the flexure of a joint, and by access of humours acquires a glibness too, the more to facilitate its moving. Government of the Tongue.

To GLIDE. v. n. [ȝlıban, Saxon; glijden, Dutch.]

1. To flow gently and silently.

By east, among the dusty vallies glide
The silver streams of Jordan's crystal flood. Fairf.

Broke by the jutting land on either side,
In double streams the briny waters glide. Dryd.

Just before the confines of the wood,
The gliding Lethe leads her silent flood. Dryd.

Where stray the Muses, in what lawn or grove?
In those fair fields where sacred Isis glides,
Or else where Cam his winding vales divides. Pope.

2. To pass on without change of step.

Ye gliding ghosts, permit me to relate
The mystick wonders of your silent state.
Dryden's Æneid.

3. To move swiftly and smoothly along.

If one of mean affairs
May plod it in a week, why may not I
Glide thither in a day? Shakspeare's Cymb.

Shoals of fish, with fins and shining scales,
Glide under the green wave. Milton.

He trembl'd every limb, and felt a smart
As if cold steel had glided through his heart.
Dryden's Fables.

All things are beheld as in a hasty motion, where the objects only glide before the eye, and disappear. Dryden.

GLIDE. n. s. [from the verb.] Lapse; act or manner of passing smoothly.

About his neck
A green and gilded snake had wreath'd itself,
Who, with her head nimble in threats, approach'd
The opening of his mouth; but suddenly,
Seeing Orlando, it unlink'd itself,
And with indented glides did slip away
Into a bush. Shakesp. As you like it.

GLI'DER. n. s. [from glide.] One that glides.

The glaunce into my heart did glide;
Hey ho the glider;
Therewith my soul was sharply gride,
Such wounds soon waxen wider. Spenser.

GLIKE. n. s. [ȝliȝ, Sax. See GREEK.] A sneer; a scoff; a flout. Not now in use.

Where's the bastard's-braves, and Charles his glikes? Shakespeare.

To GLI'MMER. v. n. [glimmer, Danish, to shine; glimmen, Dutch, to glow.]

1. To shine faintly.

The west yet glimmers with some streaks of day.
Shakespeare.

The truth appears so naked on my side,
That any purblind eye may find it out.
—And on my side it is so well apparel'd,
So clear, so shining, and so evident,
That it will glimmer through a blind man's eye.
Shakespeare.

For there no twilight of the sun's dull ray
Glimmers upon the pure and native day. Cowley.

Oft in glimmering bowers and glades
He met her. Milton.

See'st thou yon' dreary plain, forlorn and wild,
The seat of desolation, void of light,
Save what the glimmering of these livid flames
Casts pale and dreadful? Milton's Par. Lost.

The sacred influence
Of light appears, and from the walls of heav'n
Shoots far into the bosom of dim night
A glimmering dawn. Milton's Par. Lost.

Through these sad shades this chaos in my soul,
Some seeds of light at length began to roll;
The rising motion of an infant ray
Shot glimmering through the cloud, and promis'd day. Prior.

Oft by the winds, extinct the signal lies;
Or smother'd in the glimm'ring socket dies.
Gay's Trivia.

When rosy morning glimmer'd o'er the dales,
He drove to pasture all the lusty males. Pope.

2. To be perceived imperfectly; to appear faintly.

On the way the baggage post-boy, who had been at court, got a glimmering who they were. Wotton.

The pagan priesthood was always in the druids; and there was a perceivable glimmering of the Jewish rites in it, though much corrupted. Swift.

GLI'MMER. n. s.. [from the verb.]

1. Faint splendour; weak light.

2. A kind of fossil.

The lesser masses that are lodged in sparry and stony bodies, dispersedly, from their shining and glimmering, were an ind cement to the writers of fossils to give those bodies the name of mica and glimmer. Woodward on Fossils.

Stones which are composed of plates, that are generally plain and parallel, and that are flexible and elastick: talc, catsilver, or glimmer, of which there are three sorts, the yellow or golden, the white or silvery, and the black. Woodward.

GLIMPSE. n. s. [glimmen, Dut. to glow.]

1. A weak faint light.

Such vast room in nature,
Only to shine, yet scarce to contribute
Each orb a glimpse of light, convey'd so far
Down to this habitable, which returns
Light back to them. Milton.

Thousands of things, which now either wholly escape our apprehensions, or which our short-sighted reason having got some faint glimpse of, we, in the dark, grope after. Locke.

2. A quick flashing light.

Light as the lightning glimpse they ran. Milton.

My thoughtless youth was wing'd with vain desires;
My manhood, long misled by wand'ring fires,
Follow'd false lights; and when their glimpse was gone,
My pride struck out new spangles of her own. Dryden.

3. Transitory lustre.

There no dear glimpse of the sun's lovely face
Strikes through the solid darkness of the place. Cowley.

If I, celestial sire, in aught
Have serv'd thy will, or gratified thy thought,
One glimpse of glory to my issue give;
Grac'd for the little time he has to live. Dryden.

4. Short fleeting enjoyment.

If, while this wearied flesh draws fleeting breath,
Not satisfy'd with life, afraid of death,
If haply be thy will that I should know
Glimpse of delight, or pause from anxious woe;
From now, from instant now, great sire, dispel
The clouds that press my soul. Prior.

5. A short transitory view.

O friends! I hear the tread of nimble feet
Hasting this way, and now by glimpse discern
Ithuriel, and Zephon, through the shade. Milton.

Some God punisheth exemplarily in this world, that we might have a taste or glimpse of his present justice. Hakewill.

A man used to such sort of reflections, sees as much at one glimpse as would require a long discourse to lay before another, and make out in one entire and gradual deduction. Locke.

What should I do! while here I was enchain'd,
No glimpse of godlike liberty remain'd. Dryden.

6. The exhibition of a faint resemblance.

No man hath a virtue that he has not a glimpse of. Shakesp.

To GLI'STEN. v. n. [glittan, Ger.] To shine; to sparkle with light.

The bleating kind
Eye the bleak Heaven, and next the glistening earth,
With looks of dumb despair. Thomson's Winter.

The ladies eyes glistened with pleasure. Richardson's Pamela.

To GLI'STER. v. n. [glittan, Ger. glisteren, Dut.] To shine; to be bright.

The wars flame most in Summer, and the helmets glister brightest in the fairest sunshine. Spenser.

'Tis better to be lowly born,
And range with humble livers in content,
Than to be perk'd up in a glistering grief,
And wear a golden sorrow. Shakesp.

The golden sun
Gallops the zodiack in his glist'ring coach. Shakesp.

All that glisters is not gold. Shakesp.

You were more the eye and talk
Of the court to-day, than all
Else that glister'd in Whitehall. Ben Jonson.

When the sun shone upon the shields of gold and brass, the mountains glistered therewith, and shined like lamps of fire. 1 Mac. vi. 39.

It consisted not of rubies, yet the small pieces of it were of a pleasant reddish colour, and glistered prettily. Boyle.

GLI'STER. n. s. [Properly written clyster, from κλύζω.] See CLYSTER. It is written wrong even by Brown.

Now enters Bush with new state airs,
His lordship's premier minister;
And who, in all profound affairs,
Is held as needful as his glister. Swift.

Choler is the natural glister, or one excretion whereby nature excludeth another; which, descending daily unto the bowels, extimulates those parts, and excites them unto expulsion. Brown.

To GLI'TTER. v. n. [glitnian, Sax.]

1. To shine; to exhibit lustre; to gleam.

Steel glosses are more resplendent than the like plates of brass, and so is the glittering of a blade. Bacon's Phys. Rem.

Before the battle joins, from afar
The field yet glitters with the pomp of war, Dryden's Virgil.

Scarce had'st thou time t'unsheath thy conqu'ring blade;
It did but glitter, and the rebels fled. Granville.

2. To be specious; to be striking.

On the one hand set the most glittering temptations to discord, and on the other the dismal effects of it Decay of Piety.

In glitt'ring scenes, o'er her own heart severe;
In crowds collected; and in courts sincere. Young.

GLI'TTER. n. s. [from the verb.] Lustre; bright show; splendour.

Clad
With what permissive glory since his fall
Was left him, or false glitter. Milton.

Flourish not too much upon the glitter of fortune, for fear there should be too much alloy in it. Collier on Pride.

Take away this measure from our dress and habits, and all is turned into such paint and glitter, and ridiculous ornaments, as are a real shame to the wearer. Law.

GLI'TTERAND. Shining; sparkling. A participle used by Chaucer and the old English poets. This participial termination is still retained in Scotland.

GLI'TTERINGLY. adv. [from glitter.] With shining lustre.

To GLOAR. v. n. [gloeren, Dut.]

1. To squint; to look askew. Skinner.

2. In Scotland, to stare: as, what a gloar and quean.

To GLOAT. v. n. [This word I conceive to be ignorantly written for gloar.] To cast side glances as a timorous lover.

Teach every grace to smile in your behalf,
And her deluding eyes to gloat for you. Rowe.

GLO'BARD. n. s. [from glow.] A glow-worm.

GLO'BATED. adj. [from globe.] Formed in shape of a globe; spherical spheroidical.

GLOBE. n. s. [globe, Fr. globus, Lat.]

1. A sphere; a ball; a round body; a body of which every part of the surface is at the same distance from the centre.

2. The terraqueous ball.

The youth, whose fortune the vast globe obey'd,
Hiding his royal enemy betray'd,
Wept at his fall. Stepney.

Where God declares his intention to give dominion, he meant that he would make a species of creatures that should have dominion over the other species of this terrestrial globe. Locke.

3. A sphere in which the various regions of the earth are geographically depicted, or in which the constellations are laid down according to their places in the sky.

The astrologer who spells the stars,
Mistakes his globe, and in her brighter eye
Interpreis heaven's physiognomy. Cleaveland.

These are the stars,
But raise thy thought from sense, nor think to find
Such figures as are in globes design'd. Creech.

4. A body of soldiers drawn into a circle.

Him round
A globe of fiery seraphim inclos'd,
With bright imblazoning, and horrent arms. Milt.

GLOBE Thistle. n. s. [carduus orbiculatus.] A plant. Miller.

GLOBO'SE adj. [globosus, Lat.] Spherical; round.

Regions, to which
All thy dominion, Adam, is no more
Than what this garden is to all the earth,
And all the sea; from one entire globose
Stretch'd into longitude. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Then form'd the moon
Globose, and ev'ry magnitude of stars. Milton.

GLOBO'SITY. n. s. [from globose.] Sphericity; sphericalness.

Why the same eclipse of the sun, which is seen to them that live more easterly, when the sun is elevated six degrees above the horizon, should be seen to them that live one degree more westerly, where the sun is but five degrees above the horizon, and so lower and lower proportionably, 'till at last it appear not at all: no account can be given, but the globosity of the earth. Ray on the Creation.

GLO'BOUS. adj. [globosus, Lat. When the accent is intended to be on the last syllable, the word should be written globose, when on the first globous: I have transferred hither a passage of Milton, in which this rule has been neglected.] Spherical; round.

Wide over the plain, and wider far
Than all this globose earth in plain outspread;
Such are the courts of God! Milton.

The brazen instruments of death discharge
Horrible flames, and turpid streaming clouds;
Large globous irons fly, or dreadful hiss,
Singeing the air. Philips.

GLO'BULAR. adj. [globulus, Lat.] Having the form of a small sphere; round; spherical.

The figure of the atoms of all visible fluids seemeth to be globular, there being no other figure so well fitted to the making of fluidity. Grew.

GLOBULA'RIA. n. s. [Lat. globulaire, Fr.] A flosculous flower. Miller.

GLO'BULE. n. s. [globule, Fr. globulus, Lat.] Such a small particle of matter as is of a globular or spherical figure; as the red particles of the blood, which swim in a transparent serum, and are easily discovered by the microscope. These will attract one another when they come within a due distance, and unite like the spheres of quicksilver. Quincy.

The hailstones have opaque globules of snow in their centre, to intercept the light within the halo. Newton's Opticks.

Blood consists of red globules, swimming in a thin liquor called serum: the red globules are elastick, and will break; the vessels which admit the smaller globule, cannot admit the greater without a disease. Arbuthnot on Aliments

GLO'BULOUS. adj. [from globule.] In form of a small sphere; round.

The whiteness of such globulous particles proceeds from the air included in the froth. Boyle

To GLO'MERATE. v. a. [glomero, Lat.] To gather into a ball or sphere. A filamentous substance gathered into a ball is said to be glomerated, but discontinuous particles are conglobated.

GLOMERA'TION. n. s. [glomeratio, Lat.]

1. The act of forming into a ball or sphere.
2. A body formed into a ball.

The rainbow consisteth of a glomeration of small drops, which cannot fall but from the air that is very low. Bacon

GLO'MEROUS. adj. [glomerosus, Lat.] Gathered into a ball or sphere, as a ball of thread.

GLOOM. n. s. [gloman, Sax. twilight.]

1. Imperfect darkness; dismalness; obscurity; defect of light.

Glowing embers through the room,
Teach night to counterfeit a gloom Milton

Thus the seat,
That we must change for heav'n? this mournful gloom,
For that celestial light? Milton's Par. Lost

The still night, not now, as ere man fell,
Whole some and cool, and mild, but with black air
Accompanied, with damps, and dreadful gloom Milton

Now warm in love, now with'ring in thy bloom,
Lost in a convent's solitary gloom Pope

2. Cloudiness of aspect; heaviness of mind; sullenness.

To GLOOM. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To shine obscurely; as the twilight. This sense is not now in use.

Thou shalt guide me with thy counsel, and afterwards receive me into thy glory Psal. lxxiii. 24.

Then enter into glory, and resume
His seat at God's right hand, exalted high
Above all names in heav'n Milton's Paradise Lost.

It is hardly possible for you to beseech and intreat God to make any one happy in the highest enjoyments of his glory to all eternity, and yet be troubled to see him enjoy the much smaller gifts of God, in this short and low state of human life. Law.

3. Honour; praise; fame; renown; celebrity.

I think it no glory to swell in tyranny. Sidney

Glory is like a circle in the water,
Which never ceaseth to enlarge itself,
Till by broad spreading it disperse to nought. Shakesp. Hen. VI.

And with that word and warning soon was dight,
Each soldier longing for near coming glory. Fairfax.

Israel's bright sceptre far less glory brings,
There have been fewer friends on earth than kings Cowley.

Can we imagine that neither the ambition of princes, or interest, or gain in private persons, or curiosity and the desire of knowledge, or the glory of discoveries, could ever move them in that endless time to try their fortunes upon the sea. Burnet.

Your sex's glory 'tis to shine unknown,
Of all applause, be fondest of your own. Young.

4. Splendour; magnificence.

Solomon, in all his glory, was not arrayed like one of these. Matt. vi. 29.

Treated so ill, chas'd from your throne,
Returning, you adorn the town,
And with a brave revenge do show
Then glory went and came with you. Waller.

Aristotle says, that should a man under ground converse with works of art, and be afterwards brought up in the open day, and see the several glories of the heaven and earth, he would pronounce them the works of God. Addison's Spect.

5. Lustre; brightness.

Now sleeping flocks on their soft fleeces lie,
The moon, serene in glory, mounts the sky Pope
From op'ning skies may streaming glories shine,
And saints embrace thee with a love like mine
Pope

6. A circle of rays which surrounds the heads of saints in picture.

It is not a converting but a crowning grace, such an one as irradiates, and puts a circle of glory about the head of him upon whom it descends South

A smile plays with a surprising agreeableness in the eye, breaks out with the brightest distinction, and sits like a glory upon the countenance Collier of the Aspect

7. Pride; boastfulness; arrogance.

By the vain glory of men they entered into the world, and therefore shall they come shortly to an end Wisd xiv 11

On death beds some in conscious glory lie,
Since of the doctor in the mode they die Young

To GLORY. v. n. [glorior, Lat.] To boast in; to be proud of.

With like judgment Lysander when he had happened to do either well or ill when he had performed some notable exploit Sidney

They were wont in the pride of their own proceedings to glory that where as Luther did but blow away the froth and scum, his battery had the walls of popish superstition the first and hardest work of all required, which was to raise up the very ground and foundation of popery Hooker

Let them kick, they glory not in mischief,
Nor build their evils in the graves of great men
For then my guiltless blood must work against them
Shakesp

Your glorious name to-day
Thou hast seen in full display
While storms and tempest thunder on its brow
And oceans break their rage below its feet
It stands unmov'd and laughs at their fruitless heat
Jamison's Cato

This title of freeholder is what I most glory in and what no temptation shall ever make me forget the happiness of that government under which I live Addison's Freeholder

If others may always find their birth why may not we who count ours were called by God to attend on him in his altar Atterbury

Noon is out of the reach of our fortune no one therefore should glory in his prosperity Clarissa

To GLOSE. v. a. To flatter, to colloque. Hanmer See To GLOZE.

GLOSS. n. s. [γλῶσσα; glose, Fr.]

1. A scholium, a comment.

They never fear sentence, which ment not the word or sentence, but fill with their glosses upon it are the word preached, the scripture explained, or delivered unto us in sermons Hooker

If then all souls, both good and bad, do teach With general voice, that souls can never die,
'Tis not man's flatt'ring gloss, but nature's speech,
Which, like God's oracles, can never lie. Davies

Some mutter at certain passages therein, by putting their glosses upon the text, and taking with the left hand what I offer with the right. Howel

All this without a glosser's comment,
He could unriddle in a moment Hudibras.

In many places he has perverted my meaning by his glosses and interpreted my words into blasphemy and heresy, of which they were not guilty Dryden's Fables, Preface

They give the scandal, and the wise discern,
Their glosses teach an age too apt to learn Dryden

Explaining the text in short glosses, was Accursius's method Baker on Learning

Indentures cov'nants, articles they draw,
Large as the leases themselves, and larger far
Than civil codes with all their glosses are. Pope.

2. Superficial lustre. In this sense it seems to have another derivation; it has perhaps some affinity to glow.

His iron coat all over grown with rust,
Was underneath enveloped with gold,
Whose glistering gloss dark'ned with filthy dust
Spenser

You are a sectary,
That's the plain truth; your painted gloss discovers,
To men that understand you, words and weakness
Shakesp

Golden opinions from all sorts of people,
Which would be worn now in their newest gloss.
Shakesp

The doubt will be whether it will polish so well for steel glosses are more resplendent than plates of brass Bacon

Weeds that the wind did toss
The virgins wore the youths, woven coats, that cast a faint dim gloss,
Like that of oil Chapman's Iliads

It was the colour of devotion giving a lustre to reverence and a gloss to humility South

Groves fields and meadows, are at any season pleasant to look upon but never so much as in the opening of the spring, when they are all rewarded freshly with their first gloss upon them
Addison's Spectator

3. An interpretation artfully specious, a specious representation. This sense seems to partake of both the former.

Poor painters cloth with silly poets join,
To fill the world with strange but vain conceit,
One brings the stuff the other stamps the coin,
Which breeds nought else but glosses of deceit
Sidney.

It is no part of my secret meaning to draw you hereby into a field or to set upon the face of this cause any fairer gloss than the naked truth doth afford Hooker, Preface

He seems with forced quaint conceit
To set a gloss upon his bad intent Shakesp
The common gloss
Of theologians Milton

Here eyes first cry'd, her growing zeal,
And then him glossed, that Abra served so well
Prior

To GLOSS. v. a.

1. To explain by comment.

In parchment then, large as the fields, he draws
Vast tracts of land, as glossed civil laws Donne

2. To palliate by specious exposition or representation.

Is this the paradise, in description whereof so much glossing and deceiving eloquence hath been spent? Hooker's Sermons

Do I not reason wholly on your conduct?
You have the art to gloss the foulest cause Philips

3. To embellish with superficial lustre.

Be thou, who lately of the common strain
Wert one of us, if still thou dost retain
The same ill habits, the same follies too,
Glossed over only with a saint like show,
Then I resume the freedom which I gave,
Still thou art bound to vice, and still a slave,
Dryden's Pers.

GLO'SSARY. n. s. [glossarium, Lat. glossaire, Fr.] A dictionary of obscure or antiquated words.

According to Varro, when delubrum was applied to a place, it signified such a one, in quo dei simulachrum dedicatum est, and also in the old glossaries. Stillingfleet

I could add another word to the glossary Baker

GLOSSA'TOR. n. s. [glossateur, Fr. from gloss.] A writer of glosses; a commentator.

The reason why the assertion of a single judge does not prove the existence of judicial acts, is because his office is to pronounce judgment, and not to become an evidence but why may not the same be said of two judges? Therefore, in this respect, the glossator's opinion must be false. Ayliffe

GLO'SSER. n. s. [glossarius, Lat.]

1. A scholiast; a commentator.

2. A polisher.

GLO'SSINESS. n. s. [from glossy.] Smooth polish; superficial lustre.

White gloves were on his hands, and on his head
A wreath of laurel Dryden

To GLOVE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover as with a glove.

My limb
Weaken'd with grief, being now enraged with grief
Are thrice themselves hence therefore thou nice crutch,
A scaly gauntlet now, with joints of steel
Must glove this hand Shakesp. Hen IV

The next he press'd to kiss her palm
That silence of transporting calm
So soft, 'tis all but one involved
Tender as sweet a pulse glov'd Cleaveland

GLOVER. n. s. [from glove.] One whose trade is to make or sell gloves

Does he not wear a great round beard like a glover's spring knife? Shakesp

To GLOUT. v. n. [A low word of which I find no etymology.] To pout; to look sullen. It is still used in Scotland.

She lurks in midst of all her den, and streaks
From out a ghastly whirlpool all her necks,
Were, glouting round her rock, to fish he falls
Chapman

Glouting with sullen spight, the fury shook
Her clotted locks, and blasted with each look.
Garth

To GLOW. v. n. [gloꝛan, Sax. gloeyen, Dut.]

1. To be heated so as to shine without flame.

But sithence silence lessenth not my fire,
But told it flames, and hidden it does glow,
I will reveal what ye so much desire. Spenser

His goodly eyes,
That o'er the files and musters of the war
Have glow'd like plated Mars, now bend, now turn
The office and the fury of his front. Shakesp

Kunigund, wife to the emperor Henry II. to show her innocency, did take seven glowing irons, one after another, in her bare hands, and had thereby no harm. Hakewill.

Not all parts like, but all alike inform'd
With radiant light, as glowing iron with fire. Milt.

2. To burn with vehement heat.

Nor would you find it easy to compose
The mettled steeds, when from their nostrils flows
The scorching fire that in their entrails glows.
Addison's Ovid.

How op'ning heav'ns their happy region show,
And yawning gulphs with flaming vengeance glow.
Smith.

Fires that glow,
Shrieks of woe. Pope.

3. To feel heat of body.

Did not his temples glow
In the same sultry winds and scorching heats?
Addison's Cato.

Gay.

4. To exhibit a strong bright colour.

With smile that glow'd
Celestial rosy red, love's proper hue. Milton.

Clad in a gown that glows with Tyrian rays.
Dryden.

A malicious joy,
Whose red and fiery beams cast through your visage
A glowing pleasure. Dryden and Lee's Oedipus.

From the mingled strength of shade and light,
A new creation rises to my sight;
Such heav'nly figures from his pencil flow,
So warm with life his blended colours glow,
Amidst the soft variety I'm lost. Addison.

Like th' ethereal glow'd the green expanse. Savage.

Fair ideas flow,
Strike in the sketch, or in the picture glow. Pope.

Not the fair fruit that on you branches glows,
With that ripe red th' autumnal sun bestows,
Can move the god. Pope.

Each pleasing Blount shall endless smiles bestow,
And fair Belinda's blush for ever glow. Pope

Here clearer stars glow round the frozen pole.
Pope.

5. To feel passion of mind, or activity of fancy.

You strive in vain
To hide your thoughts from him, who knew too well
The inward glowings of a heart in love. Addis. Cato.

Fore'd compliments and form'd bows
Will shew thee just above neglect;
The fire with which thy lover glows,
Will settle into cold respect. Prior.

Did Shadrach's zeal my glowing breast inspire
To weary tortures, and rejoice in fire Prior.

Let the gay conscience of a life well spent
Calm ev'ry thought, inspirit ev'ry grace,
Glow in thy heart, and smile upon thy face. Pope.

With furies surrounded,
Despairing, confounded,
He trembles, he glows,
Amidst Rhodope's snows. Pope.

For others good, or melt at others woe. Pope.

To praise is always hard,
When real virtue fires the glowing bard. Lewis.

6. To rage or burn as a passion.

A fire which every windy passion blows;
With pride it mounts, and with revenge it glows.
Dryden.

When crept into aged veins,
Love slowly burns, and long remains;
It glows, and with a sullen heat,
Like fire in logs, it warms us long. Shadwell.

To* GLOW. v. a. To make hot so as to shine. Not in use.

On each side her
Stood pretty dimpled boys like smiling Cupids,
With divers colour'd fans, whose wind did seem
To glow the delicate cheeks which they did cool.
Shakesp.

GLOW. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Shining heat.

2. Vehemence of passion.

3. Brightness or vividness of colour.

The pale complexion of true love,
And the red glow of scorn and proud disdain.
Shakesp.

A waving glow his bloomy beds display,
Blushing in bright diversities of day. Pope.

Such as suppose that the great stile might happily be blended with the ornamental, that the simple, grave, and majestic dignity of Raffaelle could unite with the glow and bustle of a Paulo, or Tintoret, are totally mistaken. Reynolds.

GLOW'WORM. n. s. [glow and worm.] A small creeping grub with a luminous tail.

The honey bags steal from the humble bees,
And for night-tapers crop their waxen thighs,
And light them at the fiery glowworm's eyes. Shak.

The glowworm shews the mattin to be near,
And 'gins to pale his ineffectual fire. Shakesp.

A great light drowneth a smaller that it cannot be seen; as the sun that of a glowworm. Bacon.

The man, who first upon the ground
A glow worm spy'd, supposing he had found
A movin diamond, a breathing stone;
For life it had, and like those jewels shone:
He held it dear, 'till by the springing day
Informed, he threw the worthless worm away.
Waller.

To* GLOZE. v. n. [glæran, Sax.]

1. To flatter; to wheedle; to insinuate; to fawn.

Man will hearken to his glozing lies,
And easily transgress. Milton's Par. Lost.

So gloz'd the tempter, and his proem tun'd,
Into the heart of Eve his words made way. Milton.

A false glozing parasite would call his foolhardiness valour, and then he may go on boldly, because blindly, and by mistaking himself for a lion, come to perish like an ass. South.

Not for a glozing speech,
Fair protestations, specious marks of friendship.
Phillips.

2. To comment. This should be gloss.

Which Salique land the French unjustly gloze
To be the realm of France. Shakesp.

1. Flattery; insinuation.

Now to plain dealing; lay these glozes by.
Shakesp.

2. Specious show; gloss. Not used.

Precious couches full oft are shaked with a fever;
If then a bodily evil in a bodily gloze be not hidden,
Shall such morning dews be an ease to the heat of a lover's fire? Sidney.

GLO'ZEN. n. s. [from gloze.] A flatterer.

GLUE. n. s. [glu, Fr. gluten, Lat. glud Welsh.] A viscous body commonly made by boiling the skins of animals to a gelly; any viscous or tenacious matter by which bodies are held one to another; a cement.

Water, and all liquors, do hastily receive dry and more terrestrial bodies proportionable; and dry bodies, on the other side, drink in waters and liquors: so that, as it was well said by one of the ancients of earthly and watry substances, one is a glue to another. Bacon's Nat. Hist

The driest and most transparent glue is the best.
Moxon.

To build the earth did chance materials chuse,
And through the parts cementing glue diffuse.
Blackmore.

The flowers of grains, mixed with water, will make a sort of glue. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

To* GLUE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To join with a viscous cement.

I fear thy overthrow
More than my body's parting with my soul:
My love and fear glu'd many friends to thee.
Shakesp. Henry VI.

Whoso teacheth a fool is as one that glueth a potsherd together. Eccles. xxii. 7.

The custom of crowning the Holy Virgin is so much in vogue among the Italians, that one often sees in their churches a little tinsel crown, or a circle of stars, glued to the canvas over the head of the figure. Addison on Italy.

Most wounds, if kept clean, and from the air, the flesh will glue together with its own native balm.
Derham.

2. To hold together.

The parts of all homogeneal hard bodies, which fully touch one another, stick together very strongly; and so explaining how this may be, some have invented hooked atoms, which is begging the question; and others tell us their bodies are glued together by rest; that is, by an occult quality, or rather by nothing. Newton's Opticks

3. To join; to unite; to inviscate.

Those wasps in a honey pot are sensual men plunged in their lusts and pleasures; and when they are once glued to them, 'tis a very hard matter to work themselves out. L'Estrange.

Intemperance, sensuality, and fleshly lusts, do debase mens minds and clog their spirits; sink us down into sense, and glue us to those low and inferior things. Tillotson.

She curb'd a groan, that else had come;
And pausing, view'd the present in the tomb
Then to the heart ador'd devoutly glu'd
Her lips, and, raising it, her speech renew'd. Dryd.

I hear thee, view thee, gaze o'er all thy charms,
And round thy phantom glue my clasping arms.
Pope.

Love breaks friendship, whose delights
Feed, but not glut our appetites Denham.

What way remove
His settled hate, and reconcile his love,
That he may look propitious on our toils,
And hungry graves no more be glutted with our spoils. Dryden.

No more, my friend;
Here let our glutted execution end. Dryden's Æn.

I found
The fickle car soon glutted with the sound,
Condemn'd eternal changes to pursue,
Tir'd with the last, and eager of the new. Prior.

3. To feast or delight even to satiety.

With death's increase glut the grave. Milton.

His faithful heart, a bloody sacrifice,
Torn from his breast, to glut the tyrant's eyes.
Dryden.

A sylvan scene, which, rising by degrees,
Leads up the eye below, nor gluts the sight
With one full prospect, but invites by many,
To view at last the whole. Dryden.

4. To overfill; to load.

He attributes the ill success of either party to their glutting the market, and retailing too much of a bad commodity at once. Arbuthnot.

5. To saturate.

The menstrum, being already glutted, could not act powerfully enough to dissolve it. Boyle.

GLUT. n. s. [from the verb.]

Goes by the worse, whatever be her cause. Milton.

He's sure to go by the worst that contends with an adversary that is too mighty for him. L'Estrange.

56. To go by. To observe as a rule.

'Tis not to be supposed, that by searching one can positively judge of the size and form of a stone; and indeed the frequency of the fits, and violence of the symptoms, are a better rule to go by.
Sharpe's Surgery.

57. To go down. To be swallowed; to be received; not rejected.

Nothing so ridiculous, nothing so impossible, but it goes down whole with him for truth and earnest. L'Estrange.

Folly will not easily go down in its own natural form with discerning judges. Dryden.

If he be hungry, bread will go down. Locke.

Ministers are so wise to leave their proceedings to be accounted for by reasoners at a distance, who often mould them into systems that do not only go down very well in the coffeehouse, but are supplies for pamphlets in the present age. Swift.

58. To go in and out. To do the business of life.

The Lord shall preserve thy going out and thy coming in. Psal.

59. To go in and out. To be at liberty.

He shall go in and out, and find pasture. John.

60. To go off. To die; to go out of life; to decease.

I would the friends we miss were safe arrived.
Some must go off, and yet, by these I see
So great a day as this is cheaply bought. Shakesp.

In this manner he went off, not like a man that departed out of life, but one that returned to his abode. Tatler.

61. To go off. To depart from a post.

The leaders having charge from you to stand,
Will not go off until they hear you speak.
Shakesp. Hen. IV.

62. To go on. To make attack.

Bold Cethegus,
Whose valour I have turn'd into his poison,
And prais'd so to daring, as he would Go on upon the Gods. Ben Jonson.

63. To go on. To proceed.

He found it a great war to keep that peace, but was fain to go on in his story. Sidney.

He that desires only that the work of God and religion shall go on, is pleased with it, whoever is the instrument. Taylor.

I have escaped many threats of ill fits by these motions; if they go on, the only poltice I have dealt with is wool from the belly of a fat sheep. Temple.

To look upon the soul as going on from strength to strength, to consider that she is to shine for ever with new accessions of glory, and brighten to all eternity, is agreeable. Addison.

Go on cheerfully in the glorious cause you have undertaken. Addison.

Copious bleeding is the most effectual remedy in the beginning of the disease: but when the expectoration goes on successfully, not so proper, because it sometimes suppresseth it Arbuthnot on Diet.

I have already handled some abuses during the late management, and in convenient time shall go on with the rest Swift.

When we had found that design impraticable, we should not have gone on in so expensive a management of it. Swift.

Many clergymen write in so diminutive a manner, with such frequent blots and interlineations, that they are hardly able to go on without perpetual hesitations, or extraordinary expletives. Swift

I wish you health to go on with that noble work. Berkley.

64. To go over. To revolt; to betake himself to another party.

In the change of religion, men of ordinary understandings don't so much consider the principles as the practice of those to whom they go over. Addison.

Power, which according to the old maxim, was used to follow, is now gone over to money. Swift.

65. To go out. To go upon any expedition.

You need not have pricked me: there are other men fitter to go out than I. Shakesp. Hen. IV.

66. To go out. To be extinguished.

Think'st thou the fiery fever will go out,
With titles blown from adulation? Shak. Hen. V.

Spirit of wine burned till it go out of itself, will burn no more. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

The care of a state, or an army, ought to be as constant as the chymist's fire, to make any great production; and if it goes out for an hour, perhaps the whole operation fails. Temple.

The morning, as mistaken, turns about;
And all her early fires again go out. Dryd. Aurengz.

Let the acquaintance be decently buried, and the flame rather go out than be smothered. Collier.

My blood runs cold, my heart forgets to heave,
And life itself goes out at thy displeasure.
Addison's Cato.

And at her felt approach and secret might,
Art after art goes out, and all is night. Pope's Dunc.

67. To go through. To perform thoroughly; to execute.

Finding Pyrocles every way able to go through with that kind of life, he was as desirous for his sake as for his own to enter into it. Sidney.

If you can as well go through with the statute laws of that land, I will think you have not lost all your time there. Spenser.

Kings ought not to suffer their council to go through with resolution and direction, as if it depended on them, but take the matter back into their own hands. Bacon

He much feared the earl of Antrim had not steadiness of mind enough to go through with such an undertaking. Clarendon.

The amazing difficulty and greatness of his account will rather terrify than inform him, and keep him from setting heartily about such a task, as he despairs ever to go through with it. South's Sermons.

The powers in Germany are borrowing money, in order to go through their part of the expence. Addison on the War.

68. To go through. To suffer; to undergo.

I tell thee that it is absolutely necessary for the common good that thou shouldest go through this operation. Arbuthnot.

69. To go upon. To take as a principle.

This supposition I have gone upon through those papers. Addison.

70. The senses of this word are very indistinct: its general notion is motion or progression. It commonly expresses passage from a place, in opposition to come. This is often observable even in figurative expressions. We say, the words that go before and that come after: to day goes away and to morrow comes.

GO TO. interj. Come, come, take the right course. A scornful exhortation.

Go to then, O thou far renowned son
Of great Apollo; shew thy famous might
In medicine. Spenser.

Go to, go to, thou art a foolish fellow;
Let me be clear of thee. Shakesp. Twelfth Night.

My favour is not bought with words like these:
Go to; you'll teach you tongue another tale Roue.

GO-BY. n. s. Delusion; artifice; circumvention; over-reach.

Except an apprentice is instructed how to adulterate and varnish, and give you the go by upon occasion, his master may be charged with neglect. Collier on Pride.

GO-CART. n. s. [go and cart.] A machine in which children are inclosed to teach them to walk, and which they push forward without danger of falling.

Young children, who are try'd in
Go-carts, to keep them steps from sliding,
When members knit, and legs grow stronger,
Make use of such machine no longer. Prior.

GOAD. n. s. [gad, Sax.] A pointed instrument with which oxen are driven forward.

Oft in his harden'd hand a goad he bears. Pope.

To GOAD. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To prick or drive with the goad.
2. To incite; to stimulate; to instigate; to drive forward.

Most dangerous
Is that temptation, that doth goad us on
To sin in loving virtue. Shakesp. Meas. for Meas.

Goaded with most sharp occasions,
Which lay nice manners by, I put you to
The use of your own virtues. Shakesp.

Of all that breathes the various progeny,
Stung with delight, is goaded on by thee. Dryden.

GOAL. n. s. [gaule, Fr. a long pole, set up to mark the bounds of the race.]

1. The land mark set up to bound a race; the point marked out to which racers run.

As at the Olympian games, or Pythian fields,
Part curb their fiery steeds, or shun the goal
With rapid wheels Milton's Par. Lost.

And the slope sun his upward beam
Shoots against the dusky pole,
Pacing toward the other goal. Milton.

2. The starting post.

Hast thou beheld, when from the goal they start,
The youthful charioteers with heaving heart
Rush to the race? Dryden's Virgil.

3. The final purpose; the end to which a design tends.

Our poet has always the goal in his eye, which directs him in his race: some beautiful design, which he first establishes, and then contrives the means, which will naturally conduct him to his end. Dryden.

Each individual seeks a several goal;
But heav'n's great view is one, and that the whole. Pope.

So man, who here seems principal alone,
Perhaps acts second to some sphere unknown;
Touches some wheel, or verges to some goal;
'Tis but a part we see, and not a whole. Pope.

4. It is sometimes improperly written for gaol, or jail.

GOAR. n. s. [gore, Welsh.] Any edging sewed upon cloth to strengthen it. Skinner.

GOAT. n. s. [gat, Sax. and Scott.] A ruminant animal that seems a middle species between deer and sheep.

Gall of goat, and slips of yew. Shak. Macbeth.

We Cyclops care not for your goat fed Jove,
Nor other blest ones; we are better taught. Chapm.

You may draw naked boys riding and playing with their paper-mills upon goats, eagles, or dolphins. Peacham.

The little bear that rock'd the mighty Jove,
The swan whose borrow'd shape concealed his love,
Are grac'd with light, the nursing goat's repaid
With heav'n, and duty rais'd the pious maid.
Creech.

GOAT'BEARD. n. s. [goat and beard; barba capri.] A plant.

GOAT'CHAFER. n. s. An insect; a kind of beetle. Bailey.

GOAT'HERD. n. s. [gat and hyrd, Sax. a feeder or tender.] One whose employment is to tend goats.

Is not thilk same goatherd proud,
That sits on yonder bank,
Whose straying herd themselves doth shroud
Among the bushes rank? Spenser's Pastorals.

The first gave the goatherd good entertainment, and the marquis and his servant chased the kid about the stack. Wotton.

GOAT'MARJORAM. n. s. The same with GOATSBEARD.

GOAT'SMILK. n. s. [goat and milk] This is more properly two words.

After the fever and such like accidents are diminished, asses and goatsmilk may be necessary. Wiseman's Surgery.

GOAT'MILKER. n. s. [goat and milker.] A kind of owl so called from sucking goats. Bailey.

GOAT'S Rue. n. s. [galega.] A plant.

Goat's Rue has the reputation of being a great alexipharmick and sudorifick: the Italians eat it raw and boiled; with us it is of no esteem. Hill.

GOAT'SKIN. n. s. [goat and skin.]

Then fill'd two goatskins, with her hands divine;
With water one, and one with sable wine. Pope.

GOAT'S THORN. n. s. [goat and thorn.] An herb.

GOAT'ISH. adj. [from goat.] Resembling a goat in any quality: as, rankness; lust.

An admirable evasion of a whoremaster, man, to lay his goatish disposition on the change of a star. Shakesp. King Lear.

The last is notorious for its goatish smell, and tufts not unlike the beard of that lecherous animal. More against Atheism.

GOB. n. s. [gobe, Fr.] A small quantity. A low word.

Do'st think I have so little wit as to part with such a gob of money? L'Estrange.

GO'BBET. n. s. [gobe, Fr.] A mouthful; as much as can be swallowed at once.

Therewith she spew'd, out of her filthy maw,
A flood of poison, horrible and black,
Full of great lumps of flesh and gobbets raw. Spens.

By devilish policy art thou grown great
And like ambitious Sylla, overgorg'd
With gobbets of thy mother's bleeding heart. Shak.

The cooks, slicing it into little gobbets, prick it on a prong of iron, and hang it in a furnice. Sandy's Travels.

The giant gorg'd with flesh, and wine, and blood,
Lay stretch'd at length, and snoring in his den,
Belching raw gobbets from his maw, o'ercharg'd
With purple wine and cruddled gore confus'd.
Addison

To GOB'BET. v. a. [from the noun.] To swallow at a mouthful. A low word.

Down comes a kite powdering upon them, and gobbets up both together L'Estrange

To GOBBLE. v. a. [gober to swallow, old Fr.] To swallow hastily with tumult and noise.

The sheep were so keen upon the acorns, that they gobble up now and then a piece of the coat along with them L'Estrange

Or last you scorn in barn great store,
Fat turkeys, Thou at the door Prior.

The time too precious now to waste,
And supper bolted up in haste,
Again the shrieking wheels they run Swift

GOBBLER. n. s. [from gobble.] One that devours in haste, a gormand, a greedy eater.

GOBETWEEN. n. s. [go and between.] One that transacts business by running between two parties. Commonly in an ill sense.

Invent some one to be her assistant, or go-between, part from me. I say I shall be with her between ten and eleven Shakesp

GOBLET. n. s. [gobelet, Fr.] A bowl; or cup, that holds a large draught.

My honest goblets for a dish of wood Shakesp
We love not boarded hoards and golden crowns
But free from sutlers our repose is sound Denham
Crown high the goblets with a cheerful draught
Enjoy the present hour adjourn the future thought
Dryden

GOBLIN. n. s. [Fr. gobeline, which Spenser has once retained, writing it in three syllables. This word some derive from the Gibellines, a faction in Italy; so that elf and goblin is Guelph and Gibelline, because the children of either party were terrified by their nurses with the name of the other: but it appears that elf is Welsh, and much older than those factions. Lilith Urshon are phantoms of the night, and the Germans likewise have long had spirits among them named Goboldi, from which gobeline might be derived.]

1. An evil spirit; a walking spirit; a frightful phantom.

Angels and ministers of grace defend us!
Be thou a spirit of health, or goblin damned,
Bring with thee airs from heaven, or blasts from hell Shakesp

To whom the goblin full of wrath, replyd,
Art thou that traytor angel? Milton's Par. Lost

Always, whilst he is young, be sure to preserve his tender mind from all impressions and notions of spirits and goblins, or any fearful apprehensions in the dark Locke

2. A fairy; an elf.

His son was Elfinel, who overcame
The wicked gobbelines in bloody field,
But Elfinel was of most renowned fame,
Who of all crystal did Panthea build Spenser

Go, charge my goblins that they grind their joints
With dry convulsions, shorten up their sinews
With aged cramps Shakesp. Tempest

Meantime the village rouses up the fire,
While well attested, and as well believ'd,
Heard solemn tales the goblin story round Thomson.

GOD. n. s. [Goð, Sax. which likewise signifies good. The same word passes in both senses with only accidental variations through all the Teutonick dialects.]

1. The Supreme Being.

God is a spirit, and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth. John, iv. 24.

God above
Deal between thee and me. Shakesp. Macbeth.

All the churches of God are united into one by the unity of discipline and government, by virtue whereof the same Christ ruleth in them all Pearson

The Supreme Being, whom we call God, is necessary, self existent, eternal, immense, omnipotent, omniscient, and best being, and therefore also a being who is and ought to be esteemed most sacred or holy Grew's Cosmol

2. A false god; an idol.

He that sacrificeth unto any god, save unto the Lord only, he shall be utterly destroyed Exod xxii

As flies to wanton boys are we to the gods,
They kill us for their sport Shakesp. King Lear

Strong god of arms, whose iron sceptre sways
The freezing North, and Hyperborean seas,
And Scythian colds, and Thracian Winter Coast,
Where stands thy steeds, and thou art honoured most Dryden

3. Any person or thing deified or too much honoured.

Whose end is destruction, whose god is their belly Phil iii

I am not Lucio,
But one that scorns to live in this disguise,
For such a one as leaves a gentleman,
And makes a god of such a cullion Shakesp

To GOD. v. a. [from the noun.] To deify; to exalt to divine honours.

This last old man
Lov'd me above the measure of a father,
Nay, godded me, indeed Shakesp. Coriolanus

He had a son by her, and the king did him the honour as to stand godfather to his child Bacon

Confirmation, a primitive usage of the church, transcribed from the apostles, consists in the child's undertaking in his own name the baptismal vow, and, that he may more solemnly enter this obligation, bringing some godfather with him, not now, as in baptism, as his procurator Hammond.

GODHEAD. n. s. [from god.]

1. Godship; deity; divinity; divine nature. It is used both of the idols and of the true God.

Be content
Your low-laid son our godhead will uplift Shakesp
At the holy mount
Of heav'n's high seated top, th' imperial throne
Of godhead, fixed for ever firm and sure,
The filial power arrived Milton's Par. Lost.

So may thy godhead be confest,
So the returning year be blest. Prior

2. A deity in person; a god or goddess.

Were your godheads to borrow of men, men would forsake the gods. Shakesp. Timon.

Adoring first the genius of the place,
The nymphs and native godheads yet unknown
Dryden's Æn.

GODLESS. adj. [from god.] Without sense of duty to God; atheistical; wicked; irreligious; impious.

Of these two sorts of men, both godless, the one has utterly no knowledge of God, and the other studies how to persuade themselves that there is no such thing to be known. Hooker

That godless crew
Rebellious Milton.

For faults not his, for guilt and crimes
Of godless men, and of rebellious times,
Him his ungrateful country sent,
Their best Camillus, into banishment Dryden.

How you should bid godyeld us for your pains,
And thank us for your trouble. Shakesp. Macbeth.

GOEL. adj. [ȝolen, Sax.] Yellow. An old word.

In March at the furthest, dry season or wet,
Hop roots so well chosen let skilful go set;
The goeler and younger, the better I love;
Well gutted and pared, the better they prove. Tuss.

GO'ER. n. s. [from go.]

1. One that goes; a runner.

I would they were in Africk both together,
Myself by with a needle, that I might prick
The goer back. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

Such a man
Might be a copy to these younger times;
Which, followed well, would now demonstrate them
But goers backward. Shakesp. All's well.

Nothing could hurt either of us so much as the intervening officious impertinence of those goers between us, who in England pretend to intimacies with you, and in Ireland to intimacies with me.
Pope to Swift.

2. A walker; one that has a gait or manner of walking good or bad.

The earl was so far from being a good dancer, that he was no graceful goer. Wotton.

A double mantle, cast
A'thwart his shoulders, his faire goers grac'd
With fitted shoes. Chapman.

To GOGGLE. v. n. To look asquint.

Inflam'd all over with disgrace,
To be seen by her in such a place,
Which made him hang his head, and scowl,
And wink and goggle like an owl. Hudibras.

Nor sighs, nor groans, nor goggling eyes did want. Dryden.

GOGGLE-EYED. adj. [ȝeȝl eȝen, Sax.] Squint-eyed; not looking strait.

They are deformed, unnatural, or lame; and very unseemly to look upon, except to men that be goggle-eyed themselves. Ascham.

GO'ING. n. s. [from go.]

1. The act of walking.

When nobles are their taylors tutors,
No hereticks burnt, but wenches suitors,
Then comes the time, who lives to see't,
That going shall be us'd with feet. Shakesp.

2. Pregnancy.

The time of death has a far greater latitude than that of our birth; most women coming, according to their reckoning, within the compass of a fortnight, that is, the twentieth part of their going Grew's Cosmol. Sacra.

3. Departure.

Thy going is not lonely; with thee goes
Thy husband; him to follow thou art bound.
Milton.

GO'LA. n. s. The same with CYMATIUM.

In a cornice the gola, or cymatium of the corona, the coping, the modillions or dentelli, make a noble show. Spectator.

GOLD. n. s. [ȝolb, Sax. golud riches, Welsh. It is called gold in our English tongue, either of geel, as Scaliger says, which is, in Dutch, to shine; or of another Dutch word, which is gelten, and signifies in Latin valere, in English to be of price or value: hence cometh their ordinary word gelt, for money.
Peacham on Drawing.]

1. Gold is the heaviest, the most dense, the most simple, the most ductile, and most fixed of all bodies, not to be injured either by air or fire, and seeming incorruptible. It is soluble by means of sea-salt; but is injured by no other salt. Gold is frequently found native, and very rarely in a state of ore. Pure gold is so fixed, that Boerhaave informs us of an ounce of it set in the eye of a glass furnace for two months, without losing a single grain. Hill on Fossils.

Gold hath these natures: greatness of weight, closeness of parts, fixation, pliantness or softness, immunity from rust, and the colour or tincture of yellow. Bacon's Nat Hist.

Ah! Buckingham, now do I ply the touch,
To try if thou be current gold indeed. Shakesp.

We readily say this is gold, and that a silver goblet, only by the different figures and colours represented to the eye by the pencil. Locke.

The gold fraught vessel which mad tempests beat,
He sees now vainly make to his retreat. Dryden.

2. Money.

For me, the gold of France did not seduce,
Although I did admit as a motive
The sooner to effect what I intended. Shakesp.

Thou that so stoutly had resisted me,
Give me thy gold, if thou hast any gold;
For I have bought it with an hundred blows Shak.

3. It is used for any thing pleasing or valuable. So among the ancients χρυσῆ ἀφροδίτη; and animamque morosque aureos educit in astra. Horace.

The king's a bawcock, and a heart of gold,
A lad of life, an imp of fame. Shakesp. Hen V.

GOLD of Pleasure. n. s. [myagrum.] A plant.

GO'LDBEATER. n. s. [gold and beat.] One whose occupation is to beat or foliate gold to gild other matter.

Our goldbeaters, though, for their own profit sake, they are wont to use the finest gold they can get, yet they scruple not to employ coined gold, and that the mint-masters are wont to alloy with copper or silver, to make the coin more stiff, and less subject to be wasted by attrition. Boyle

GO'LDBEATER'S Skin. n. s. The intestinum rectum of an ox, which goldbeaters lay between the leaves of their metal while they beat it, whereby the membrane is reduced thin, and made fit to apply to cuts or small fresh wounds, as is now the common practice. Quincy.

When your gillyflowers blow, if they break the pod, open it with a penknife at each division, as low as the flower has burst it, and bind it about with a narrow slip of goldbeater's skin, which moisten with your tongue, and it will stick together.
Mortimer

GO'LDBOUND. adj. [gold and bound.] Encompassed with gold.

Thy air,
Thou other goldbound brow is like the first. Shak

GO'LDEN. adj. [from gold.]

1. Made of gold; consisting of gold.

O would to God that the inclusive verge
Of golden metal, that must round my brow,
Were red hot steel to sear me to the brain. Shak.

Nine royal knights in equal rank succeed,
Each warrior mounted on a fiery steed
In golden armour glorious to behold;
The rivets of their arms were nail'd with gold
Dryden.

2. Shining; bright; splendid; resplendent.

So sweet a kiss the golden sun gives not
To those fresh morning drops upon the rose;
Nor shines the silver moon one half so bright
Through the transparent bosom of the deep.
Shakesp.

'Tis better to be lowly born
Than wear a golden sorrow. Shakesp. Hen. VIII
